Jesus Resurrected

Accomack supervisors returned Jesus Christ to their meetings Wednesday night in a 6-3 vote by rescinding recent action that mandated non-denominational invocations.

About 150 people filled Metompkin Elementary School's cafeteria to show their displeasure with offering generic prayers. Emotions ran deep as residents stood behind the podium-turned-pulpit to profess their faith.

Supervisors Sign Off on Economic Plan

By Ron West

Following an extended discussion and much public input, the Northampton County Board of Supervisors accepted the Economic Development Plan Tuesday as part of the Comprehensive Plan.

At their March meeting, the supervisors had tabled the economic portion of the Comprehensive Plan pending an economic analysis of changes to land uses in the county as a result of the proposed zoning ordinance amendments. On Tuesday, Tom Flynn, president of Thomas Point Associates, Inc., painted a picture of increasing taxes for residential property owners if the number of commercial businesses stagnates or decreases. "As a taxpayer, I would be concerned by the increase in the percentage of the residential tax base versus that of commercial," said Flynn. He cited the lack of infrastructure, including a public water and wastewater system, as a deterrent to job opportunities. Referring to a comment about the county having ample property zoned commercial, Flynn stated, "It's one thing to have enough commercial space but another to have it in the right location. It's not the quantity of land, it's the location of it."

Dave Kabler and Ken Dufty both expressed concerns with the findings of the economic study, noting that it failed to address the effects of growth on the environment and the Shore's supply of fresh water.

Supervisor Richard Tankard questioned the findings and suggested that the percentage of revenue from taxes on residential property is a reflection of increased property values rather than a decline in commercial values.

Shore Records 5th Traffic Fatality of the Year

By Linda Cicoira

A Virginia Beach man was killed in a traffic accident in Northampton County over the Easter holiday weekend.

Sgt. Joe Bunting of the Virginia State Police said Corey Reddick, 22, was ejected from the vehicle and died at the scene.

The 2002 Ford Explorer was headed south on Lankford Highway at about 1:20 p.m. Friday just south of Weirwood when the driver, Kevin Moses, 35, of Manchester, Md., allegedly dozed off, said Bunting.

The vehicle ran off the road to the right and overturned several times, he added.

The driver and the four other passengers were taken to hospitals, where they were treated and released. Rescue units from Cape Charles, Nassawadox, Exmore and Melfa responded.

Reddick, the driver's cousin, was the only person in the vehicle not wearing a safety restraint. The family was going to a funeral in North Carolina, according to Bunting.

Moses was charged with reckless driving.

Schools in Frenzy Over Funding

By Linda Cicoira

The board giveth and the board taketh away.

Last week, Accomack supervisors informally agreed to cut $720,000 from county schools in their proposed fiscal 2009-10 budget. They called for Superintendent W. Richard Bull to come before them to justify spending. Then after they got the School Board and other division officials in a frenzy, they put $450,000 of it back. That action was done by consensus Tuesday.

When proposed tax-rate increases were discussed Wednesday by the Board of Supervisors, Chairman Steve Mallette said, "It is very difficult to get it below 6 cents (per $100 valuation on real estate) unless we're willing to go back and take it from schools."

So everything is up in the air until the supervisors meet at 5 p.m. Monday for their final budget deliberations. They asked Finance Director Mike Mason to be ready then to show how additional 1 percent, 2 percent and 3 percent across-the-board cuts to all departments would reduce anticipated tax increases.

Supervisor Phil McCaleb said the county should have increased the real-estate rate by 3 cents last year, as he suggested. Now he said at least a 7- or 8-cent hike would be needed to build on. "The reserves wouldn't stand a minor hurricane or a week's interruption of the bridge-tunnel."

Local funding for schools amounted to about $15 million this year. Approximately 5,000 students attend Accomack public schools.

The poll Tuesday showed 5-4 in favor of restoring the money for education. Supervisors Mallette, McCaleb, Grayson Chesser, and Sandy Hart Mears wanted to cut the entire amount. Vice Chairwoman Laura Belle Gordy and Supervisors Donald Hart, Wanda Thornton, Jack Gray and Ron Wolff were successful in returning part of the funds to the schools.

"It all comes back to the teachers," said Gray, a retired teacher and school administrator.

School Board Chairman Al McMath told the supervisors his panel took "exception that you would summarily call Mr. Bull and expect to derive information that has yet to be discussed. One of the School Board's major commitments is to secure the funding necessary to meet the children's needs. We are at the point where board talks to board and, respectfully, we would appreciate that courtesy."

Mallette said the supervisors did not mean to "slight" the School Board. Bull was asked to speak because he usually represents the school division. "The School Board is always invited to come to the meetings," said Mallette.

"We feel that we are good stewards of the county's monies," McMath told the supervisors. "We all know the first thing that new residents will ask is 'What are the schools like?' The answer has a direct impact on the county," said McMath.

"Economic development will only increase in the future if our schools improve," said Bull. "It took eight years for us to get full accreditation."

Both school officials agreed that the number of jobs affected by cuts is unclear at this point.

In between supervisors' meetings, the School Board met for its own session and concluded that county supervisors don't understand the importance of education or just don't care about the future of local children.

For about 15 minutes, the school officials listened to the audio of a supervisors' session from last week. They concluded that the cuts would mean eliminating jobs, which in turn would equal a larger workload and an increase in student-teacher ratios. The latter could mean a loss in state revenue due to ratio restrictions for kindergarten through third grade.

"I am so saddened and embarrassed that our governing body thinks so little of our youth," said School Board member Patricia White. "Clearly, there is a lack of belief in the children ... our teachers work tirelessly as well as our administrators."

"It's about the children," said Holden. "It's not a joke. I listened to the laughter," he said of the supervisors.

Particularly alarming to the School Board were the comments of Supervisor Phil McCaleb, who favored cutting funds in hopes that more students would be sent to "Broadwater and these other Christian schools" so the county wouldn't have to pay to educate them. McCaleb said 10 percent or more of county children are not schooled at the county's expense. "What can we do to help that along?" he asked.

"Here's a smart dude," School Board member Parker Johnson said of McCaleb.

It's Official: Onancock is Cool

Onancock is the coolest town in the South — and sixth in the nation, according to Budget Travel Magazine and the more than 5,000 votes the town garnered on the publication's Web site.

It's been that way for nearly 400 years.

Chartered in 1680, the town boasts an 1800 federal style house museum, an array of restaurants from gourmet to an Irish pub, a live theater, a vintage movie house showing international films monthly, art galleries, boutiques and bed and breakfasts. Even the early colonists would come just outside of Onancock to see the first play performed in North America, "Ye Bear & Ye Cubbe."

With all that history, Onancock isn't just focused on the past. It was the first town in Virginia to have all-green certified lodging, and pet-friendly lodging and businesses. And where else can you find the House of Deals, an old-fashioned hardware store where you can buy everything from nails to fresh seaside clams to coffee machines, and yes, the boys still play cards in the back.

Onancock Creek weaves around the town, connecting it to the Chesapeake Bay. Boating, especially kayaking, can lead one to secret marshes where sea and sky provide a private haven.

"Heaven and earth never agreed better to frame a place for man's habitation," said Capt. John Smith, founder of the hamlet.

The magazine was looking for Main Street, U.S.A. — places where you find real people. But also organizers of the contest were in search of places with an "edge" and with a population of fewer than 10,000.

Town Meeting Monday at Captain's Cove

Atlantic District Supervisor Ron Wolff will host a town meeting with state Sen. Ralph Northam and Del. Lynwood Lewis Monday, April 20, at 7 p.m. at the new marina at Captain's Cove in Greenbackville.

Supervisors Reduce Their Health Plan by 25 Percent

By Linda Cicora

About $62,000 in county tax dollars will pay 75 percent of the cost of health insurance for Accomack supervisors and their family members in the upcoming fiscal year.

That means the supervisors will no longer receive fully paid coverage for themselves and their families and will be responsible for paying about $21,000 which will be taken out of their twice-monthly checks.

Not all the supervisors had favored paid family coverage.

"Don't you all feel guilty?" Vice Chairwoman Laura Belle Gordy asked Chairman Steve Mallette. "I don't think there is a person on the board who cannot afford to pay insurance for their family. I just think it's terrible."

"I don't feel guilty," said Mallette. He contended that when he sought the office, the benefit was available. "It was there for 19 years," he said, adding that with all the work involved in the job, "It's money well spent."

"You knew you were going to have to spend time," Gordy replied.

Supervisor Phil McCaleb agreed with Mallette that a contract should not be changed "mid-stream. I think it is unfair to do that."

Supervisors Wanda Thornton and Donald Hart were adamant in their opposition to paying for family.

In the end, the consensus was unanimous that the county would pay 75 percent of the premiums. That came at Thornton's urging. "If we don't do this, the board is going to end up paying zero," she said. "It's a fall-back position. We can't get five votes to do away with it."

"I still think the board should only get the same thing as the employees," said Thornton. In a poll, the supervisors decided that the county would continue to pick up the tab for 100 percent of a single subscriber cost for employees. The county does not pay for health insurance for the family of employees.

No one addressed County Attorney Mark Taylor's contract, which includes fully paid coverage for him and his family for $15,555.

County Administrator Steve Miner, who also has been receiving full coverage for himself and his wife, will join the ranks of other county employees with respect to health insurance.

Referring to the fully paid insurance which the supervisors had been receiving, Accomac resident Robert Gresham said, "What a pompous slap in the face to the taxpayers and employees of Accomack County. Do these people even care about employee morale? If there is justification for calling for a recall vote on these five supervisors, we need to do it. Accomack County government is becoming a disgrace to its residents."

Gresham, who has been picketing in front of the county office building prior to each meeting, listed Supervisors Mallette, Sandy Mears, Ron Wolff, Grayson Chesser and Phil McCaleb in his reference.

The board agreed to use a new health plan to save $80,000. County Administrator Steve Miner said the policy "is a very excellent plan."

In other budget action, the supervisors unanimously gave the green light to a plan to initiate semi-annual billing for personal- property taxes and eliminate the need for vehicle decals in 2010. Finance Director Mike Mason said $2 million in taxes would come in earlier by enacting the plan. About $950,000 of that money would go toward a "rainy day" fund with the rest earmarked for a new software program needed to manage the billing.

A majority of the board also agreed to decrease the funds for a new public service authority from $200,000 to $100,000. Only Mallette and McCaleb were opposed.

Other county departments were cut between 5 and 10 percent, in addition to the 3 percent across-the-board slashes that were originally included in the draft.

The board met for about 25 minutes in a closed session "for consultation with legal counsel regarding litigation threatened by the Unalienable Rights Foundation." No action was taken when the board came back in open session.

Priceless Dream May Land on Shore

By Linda Ciciora

Dean Orsino and his wife, Laurie Walton, have a $42 million dream. The Chincoteague Island shop owners want a retired NASA space shuttle to be housed on the Eastern Shore of Virginia.

So far, Gov. Tim Kaine, Del. Lynwood Lewis, the Virginia Tourism Corporation and Chincoteague's Town Council, Oyster Museum, Main Street Merchants Association and Cultural Alliance are in favor of the vision.

"I had a whimsical idea," said Orsino, who is hoping that no U.S. schools, federal agencies, states or municipalities buy the shuttle. Those are the groups to which NASA is willing to sell the shuttles when the program ends in 2010.

According to Scientific American magazine, NASA "estimates it will cost $42 million to detoxify the fuel systems and conduct other 'safing' measures, prep the orbiter for indoor display and transport it by air to its final destination."

NASA says "it may cost more to reach far-flung locations requiring a long-distance haul 'over public roadways which may require removal of light posts and traffic signals or transport by barge over water.'

Orsino and Walton want the shuttle to be brought to the NASA Wallops Visitors' Center to entice more tourists to visit the area. Their business, Threadgoodes, a home merchandise and accessories store, is just a few miles away.

"I think it's a great idea," Chincoteague Mayor Jack Tarr said Monday when Orsino brought the concept to Town Council. Next week he plans to ask Accomack supervisors for their endorsement.

"It certainly would be an additional draw," Orsino said. "I don't know what the statistics would be."

Since the government allocates money for retired ships, Orsino said perhaps the same could be done for the space shuttle. "They're not just going to park it at the end of a Florida or Houston runway," he said.

NASA has three shuttles, Atlantis, Endeavour and Discovery. According to the space agency, one of them is bound for the National Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C.

That leaves two shuttles up for grabs. Just imagine "the years of economic benefits for the Eastern Shore and Chincoteague," said Orsino.

"They could accommodate it," he added, pointing out that the visitors' center is the perfect spot since NASA already owns it. Giving vacationers more to do when they come here, while keeping the "Mayberry" effect of Chincoteague,

Nine years ago, Orsino told Walton that he would take her on a trip to anywhere. She desired to see the famous island ponies. A few years later, they bought a condo on Chincoteague.

captivated the crowd. "For over 24 years ... each and every time, I prayed for each and every one of you in the name of Jesus," she said.

"If you don't stand for something, you might fall for anything," she added, telling the audience that she depended on Jesus after her son died. "In the name of Jesus there's healing. It gets you through," she said.

Kay Lewis, president of the local citizens' group Hear Our Voices (HOV), presented petitions to the supervisors with the signatures of 635 residents. All wanted the action rescinded.

"Many years ago, Christ was denied," said Lewis. "Let it not be said that in 2009 this Board of Supervisors denied him again."

Supervisors Wanda Thornton and Donald Hart led the movement to allow invocations by all clergy. Supervisors Jack Gray, Ron Wolff, Phil McCaleb and Vice Chairwoman Laura Belle Gordy also wanted to go back to the old tradition.

The thought was that usually Christian prayers would be given that include "Jesus," but that prayers offered on a rotation by all denominations would be accepted.

Gordy said the "issue was a shock to her." She took the advice of County Attorney Mark Taylor and voted accordingly the last time. But, after the letters started pouring in, she felt she "had really done a crime."

"We were given freedom of religion, not freedom from religion," said Thornton.

Chairman Steve Mallette and Supervisors Grayson Chesser and Sandy Hart Mears stood firm in wanting to get the attorney general's opinion on the issue.

Elimination of references to particular religious beliefs occurred after Taylor warned supervisors that the county could be sued if it did otherwise.

Thornton said Taylor would request the attorney general's opinion by submitting his own thoughts on the subject. "That's how it works,"

Bob Gresham of Accomac picks in front of the Accomack County administrative building this week. He had specific supervisors in mind when he called them puppets, but took their names off the sign at the insistence of his wife.

she said. She contended that the matter should have been handled differently.

"Each of us has our own relationship to Jesus Christ," said Mallette. "I swore to God" to uphold the law. "I didn't have my fingers crossed when I did that." He said he wants legal clarification.

McCaleb voted initially to follow Taylor's advice. He asked the crowd how many would accept a tax increase to pay off a lawsuit.

"You're running scared," an unidentified voice shouted.

"Hire an attorney that will win the case," yelled another.

"I think we're doing a disservice ... if we don't ask for an opinion," said Chesser. "To do anything less is not doing our duty."

"All this controversy started from within," Hart complained. "For 29 years ... we have been saying invocations ... never, never one time stepping on anybody's toes ... everybody who said the prayer spoke from the heart."

"I don't believe I ever read anything that was ever more jolting" than the headline that Jesus was banned, said Chincoteague Councilman Terry Howard. "I hope the headlines are just the opposite next time."

Land-Use Taxation Sparks Debate

By Linda Cicoira

Danny Mills of Cashville and his brother rent farmland from about 40 different property holders.

"My landlords are absolutely wonderful people," he said. "But they have to pass these additional taxes along."

Mills was asking Accomack supervisors to reconsider raising real-estate rates and to continue with land-use taxation, which gives tax breaks for those acres.

"As you drive my cost up, you are taking away this advantage we have" over Midwest farmers, he said. "We can't pass the price along. We have to live with it."

Mills said, "Services are very minimal. We are already paying a lot of revenues."

The subject has been controversial among supervisors who are looking for ways to raise money for the county's dwindling coffers. Some officials are concerned about those who take advantage of the tax break only to later develop the property.

There have also been questions about the enforcement of time restrictions for developers and the application of property tax policies.

Supervisor Jack Gray voiced opposition to penalizing landowners and farmers by doing away with land-use taxation. He added that since the Shore's first settlers, the farmers have paid the "brunt of the taxes."

Supervisor Wanda Thornton argued that migrant labor "uses tremendous amounts of services in Accomack County." She listed Social Services, the hospital, judicial system and schools. "It is a horrendous amount," she said.

Community Notes

Cape Charles Town Council last week voted 4-0 (Councilmen Chris Bannon and Steve Bennett absent) to move forward with the proposed wastewater treatment facility for the town. The 250,000-gallon-per-day (gpd) facility will replace a 20-year-old plant of similar size, but will reduce chemical runoff into the Chesapeake Bay.

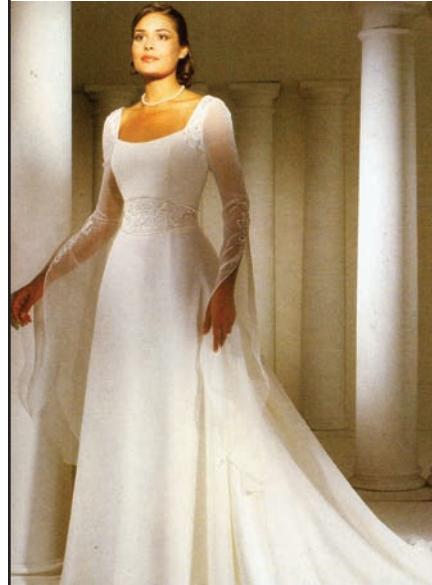

Town Consultant Bob Panek outlined timelines for completing the engineering plans and indicated that if all progresses as expected, construction will begin in September. The town is under the gun to have a replacement plant operational by January 2011.

Cape Charles hopes to use a number of grants and other federal money, such as the stimulus program, to help pay the estimated $16 million pricetag. One idea to help reduce the cost is to offer the services of the new plant to users outside the town. Councilman Larry Veber suggested that the residents of Cheriton and other nearby areas might wish to consider becoming part of a regional system operated by the Town of Cape Charles.

Prior to voting on the issue, some residents voiced concern over the new facility, knowing that Webtide Associates is also in the process of developing a regional system. Linda Buskey said the town cannot afford the cost of a new plant with such an enormous cost. She pressed council to back off from the idea and partner with Webtide.

John Blackburn also urged the town to side with Webtide. "A shared facility is a better way to go," he said.

Laura Talman echoed Buskey and Blackburn and questioned the bond rating for the town.

Mary Ann McDivit expressed concern over wastewater bills that could exceed $80 per month.

Oral Lambert suggested that the state would not turn a blind eye to giving the town an extension on the time limit of January 2011 to be in compliance with discharge of treated wastewater into the bay. He too suggested the need to partner with Webtide to form a regional system.

Berkley Rayfield addressed council with regards to reuse of the former Cape Charles High School, stating that a group expects to begin operation of a new private school this fall. Rayfield indicated that the school would likely have 50 students when it opens. The town is currently investigating using the building as a multi-family structure that could have as many as 13 apartments carved out of the former classrooms, with a projected rental per unit for the town of $500 to $650 per month. Melvin Dudley suggested that the town use the old school as a site for the town library.

Harbormaster Smitty Dize announced that the town has been awarded a grant for $377,000 to construct additional docks for larger vessels. The docks will be added near the existing "gravel docks" but not until the first of several offshore breakwater units is in place.

In other action, council authorized the mayor to sign contracts to help move forward with the Broadband Initiative for the town.

Council also agreed to schedule a public hearing on a request to

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency announced last week that it has awarded a $662,900 grant to Cape Charles to eliminate sanitary sewer overflows at the Mason Avenue pump station.

The sanitary overflow is located 40 feet from Cape Charles Harbor.

The grant, funded through the state and Tribal Grant Program, will be used to install 2,000 feet of sewer lines to divert wastewater flow from Mason Avenue to the Cape Charles wastewater treatment plant.

Cape Charles also will upgrade four wastewater pump stations — at Mason Avenue, Pine Street, Plum Street and Washington Avenue — replacing pumps and electrical controls and making other necessary repairs.

Upgrading the pump stations will improve their performance and increase their capacity. The total cost of the project is $1.2 million.

The town is required to correct this sanitary overflow as part of a February 2006 letter of agreement with the Virginia Department of Environmental Quality.

Onley will hold its first April Fling Saturday, May 23 (Memorial Day Weekend), with a rain date of Monday (Memorial Day), May 25. The event will include multiple yard sales in addition to artisans showing and selling their creations.

As Accomack's Teacher of the Year, Taylor will compete at the state level later this year.

Other nominees for the Accomack honor were Humphrey Likachik of Accawmacke Elementary School, Rosemary Gibbons of Arcadia High School, Traci Robbins of Chincoteague High School, Tony Nock of Kegotank Elementary School, Kara Perry of Metompkin Elementary School, Tanisha Bagwell of Nandua Middle School, Ruthanne McConnell of Pungo-Georgetown Elementary School, and Loni Charnock of Tangier Combined School.

Jayanne Bridges Wins Top Teaching Award

An Eastern Shore native won $25,000, a top prize in the 2009 McGlothlin Awards for Teaching Excellence.

Jayanne Kellam Bridges, a sixth-grade science teacher at Christiansburg Middle School, impressed the judges with her ability to engage students through hands-on learning and community service projects.

The award was given last week at a ceremony at Radford University.

Bridges is an alumnus of that school. She is also a graduate of Nandua High School and Eastern Shore Community College.

The award ranks among the largest individual teaching prizes in the nation and is available only to educators from selected parts of Virginia, Tennessee, West Virginia and Kentucky.

Bridges must use $10,000 for international travel. The goal is to broaden the thinking and experience of the winning teachers and to further enhance their excellence as professional educators.

IN REMEMBRANCE

Johnny N. Godwin Jr. died last week. Johnny served for many years as an Accomack County deputy sheriff and later as the County fire marshal from 1985 until his retirement on Jan. 1, 2007. For many of the years from 1976-87 that I was Accomack County commonwealth's attorney, Johnny was a deputy sheriff.

Throughout the years, I have never known a police officer who was more capable and dedicated than Johnny Godwin.

Johnny was unsurpassed at solving crimes. His assigned area was Atlantic District, where he lived. During that era, we did not have all the scientific and forensic CSI-like techniques that are now so prevalent. Johnny accomplished it through his "street smarts," gritty determination, good old-fashioned "shoe leather," and the fact that he knew people in his district and those people would talk to him. The Sheriff's Office at that time was not organized into divisions such as criminal investigations, civil process, communications, and administration. Deputy sheriffs, like Johnny, essentially had to do it all. It was not unusual for Johnny to work 50 to 60 hours a week if he was working a case. He worked a great deal at night, when he could make contact with people, or keep them from "ducking him," as the case would be. Routinely, he initially had a good intuition of who was involved, which was usually later substantiated. I can't count the nights that Johnny called me, picked me up, and off we went to interview a potential witness he had "flushed out." We rode many a mile together on the back roads of Atlantic District in those days.

I often said that you could have dropped Johnny from downtown Sanford into the middle of New York City and in 30 days he would have been an effective police officer. In those 30 days he would have gained rapport and trust with every "street person" in his assigned area and would have been totally in touch with whatever was happening.

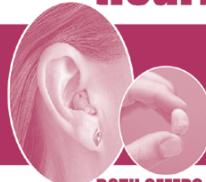

Johnny did not have much in the way of formal education. He quit school early, later acquiring a GED. He often cautioned young people against leaving school early. Deputy sheriffs filed written reports and we used to "rag" on Johnny because of some of his spellings. He always said in response that there were two ways of spelling a word: the "Webster way" and the "Godwin way," and who was to say which was more accurate.

It would have been nice to have again reminisced with Johnny one last time and told old "war stories." Most assuredly he would have had a cigarette in one hand and a coffee cup in the other.

The people of Accomack County, and especially Atlantic District, owe a debt of gratitude to Johnny Godwin for his many years of public service. Judging by the number of people and the grief clearly present at his funeral last Friday, it seems clear that the good folks of the county well acknowledged such.

On April 8, the 2009 Virginia General Assembly met at its constitutionally required reconvened session, to consider amendments to various House and Senate bills made by the governor, and also to consider the governor's vetoes of certain legislation.

The governor made 100 amendments to House and Senate bills and vetoed nine bills. It takes a simple majority to either accept or reject a governor's amendment and it takes a two-thirds majority of both Houses to override a governor's veto. The focus of what turned out to be a very long day (noon-8:30 p.m.) and perhaps the most controversial and complicated measure was the governor's amendment to a Senate bill which would have broadened eligibility for unemployment benefits, and would therefore have allowed Virginia to receive $125 million in unemployment funds as part of the federal recovery money. The fundamental issue was whether to make the changes or refuse to do so out of fear that the changes would be permanent and could, several years down the road, result in higher unemployment insurance premiums for Virginia employers. States were given a "menu" from the federal government of benefits, two or more of which must be in place before a state could access these federal dollars. Virginia has a very conservative unemployment compensation program; only four other states have more limited coverage. In fact, it ranks 50th in average tax per employee in the United States. Gov. Kaine chose the two least costly to employers if employers should ever begin to bear a share of the expanded benefits. Specifically, he chose to allow those engaged in workforce training programs at the time they lose their jobs to continue the training and collect unemployment benefits and second, allow those who had and lost part-time jobs to collect unemployment benefits while they sought work.

At first I was skeptical of the changes because of the possibility that within a few years employers could bear additional unemployment insurance program costs. However, they would be reversible once the federal money ran out. The benefits would also be relatively modest in cost if employers should ever have to bear the cost of them ($4 per employee per year). The annual cost of the broadened benefits is only a very small portion of the $125 million. In addition, it is clear that these are extraordinary times. The Virginia Employment Commission provided me with statistics that indicated that the current unemployment rate in Accomack County is 7.8 percent and in Northampton County it's 10.3 percent. The state rate is 6.5 percent. Accomack County has lost more than 1,000 jobs since this recession started and both counties will likely lose several more before we are on the road to recovery. Also, this was not a decision as to the appropriateness of the Stimulus Package as a whole nor its individual parts. The decision to spend this money has already been made in Washington and it will be spent somewhere in this country, so my thought was that it should be spent in our communities (it is, after all, funded by our tax dollars or the debt supplying the money will be serviced by our tax dollars).

Sen. Northam and I will be having a series of town hall meetings to discuss what happened during the 2009 General Assembly, the Federal Stimulus Package in Virginia, and any other issues on the minds of our constituents. The schedule is as follows: Tuesday, April 21, at 5:30 p.m. at Eastern Shore Community College; Wednesday, April 22, at 5:30 p.m. at the Chincoteague Center; and Thursday, April 23, at 5:30 p.m. at St. Charles Parish Hall in Cape Charles.

I am back on the Shore full-time and can be reached by mail at P.O. Box 760, Accomac, VA 23301; telephone at 787-1094; and e-mail at Delllewis@house.state.va.us

SHOREKEEPER To Host Creekwatcher Orientation

This Sunday, April 19, the Virginia Eastern SHOREKEEPER will be hold an informational meeting for anyone interested in participating in the Creekwatcher Program. All current Creekwatchers are and encouraged to attend.

The Creekwatcher program is a network of Eastern Shore residents who monitor the coastal waters of the Eastern Shore for threats to our coastal water quality, and other concerns.

If you live on or near the water, and are interested in learning more about becoming a Creekwatcher, please contact Dave Burden at shorekeeper@gmail.com or meet at the Virginia Eastern SHOREKEEPER office at Salt Grove on Cherrystone Creek at 5 p.m. Sunday, April 19.

Coast Guard Open House May 16

The Coast Guard will host an open house at its facility in Chincoteague May 16 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The open house is designed to increase public awareness of the services that the U.S. Coast Guard provides to the Eastern Shore, celebrate Armed Forces Day, and kick off National Safe Boating Week.

Events on the Chincoteague Base will include numerous displays, tours of Coast Guard vessels, demonstration of a buoy maintenance evolution, and the opportunity to learn about boat operator courses and to shoot your expired flares.

The public is invited to learn about the wide range of Coast Guard and Coast Guard Auxiliary activities, and see what they do for the residents and visitors of the Eastern Shore. Attendees can meet the crew, try their hand at knot tying and learn what it takes for a boat to receive and pass a vessel safety check.

Supervisor Spencer Murray expressed concerns with the county's economic future. "I do not believe and the public has not accepted that agriculture, aquaculture, and tourism alone will assure our prosperity," he said. "Counties, like corporations, stagnate and die when they fail to innovate and grow, losing market share and an economic reason to exist. Our challenges are real and because I believe much of this economic plan draft acknowledges this reality, and because I hope for a revised Zoning Ordinance that supports this economic plan, I can support its adoption."

Murray stated that if the county wants no growth, all it needs to do is keep on doing what it's doing.

A second issue that drew public comments concerned revamping the Joint Local Planning Commission whose size has varied from as 9 to 15 members, with some appointed by the county and some by the towns.

Following a brief discussion, the supervisors, voted to withdraw from the current Joint Local Planning Commission and establish a new commission with nine members, all appointed by the board of supervisors — one from each voting district and three at-large. One main change from the current commission makeup will be that while the towns will be able to suggest representatives to the commission, they will not have the opportunity to actually appoint someone of their choosing.

In a final action of the evening the Supervisors voted to request the Army Corps of Engineers (COE) to consider dredging the entrance to Occohannock Creek to improve navigation to that waterway. It was reported that the COE is currently dredging portions of the Virginia Inside Passage (VIP) in the area of Magothy Bay south of Oyster.

Love,
Teya, Kenya

& Grandad

Happy 22nd Birthday, Little Big Bro

I thought of you with love today, but that is nothing new.
I thought about you
yesterday and days before that too
I think of you in silence
I often speak your name
Now all I have is memories and your pictures
in a frame.

Your memory is my keepsake with which I will never part
God has you in his keeping, I have you in my heart.
For every day, no matter where, in my heart
you will be there.
Today, tomorrow, my whole life through for I will never stop thinking of & loving you

Love,
Big Little Sis Shaka
Forever in my heart

We miss you; and though it seems like we

There's not much going on from Painter to the bridge-tunnel when I'm out delivering the Post starting around 3:30 a.m., but I keep my eyes peeled just the same, because one never knows.

Deer jumping out of nowhere (even on Lankford Highway sometimes), unexpected debris flying out of a pick-up when its bed isn't properly tied down, giant chunks of a retread tire from a big rig going who-knows-where — I watch for it all. Plus, every time I get out of my car for a delivery, I glance around for a couple of seconds to see if anything in that vicinity has changed, like when I'm in a town such as Exmore or Cape Charles, I look to see if any new business has opened or any old one has closed, or if it's an even smaller town to see if anything is different at all.

Usually, I must say, everything in my travels stays pretty much the same and fits in with everything else around it. But, one exception I come up with every week is in Exmore at Shore Plaza, where Food Lion and Roses are — and that exception is a big, old navy-blue bus with "Exmore Police Department" written across its entire side.

"That bus," Exmore Town Clerk Ethel Parks clarified for me, "is a 1971 Thomas Bus, and that's all the information I have on it."

Fair enough, I thought. But, what's left of my inquiring mind wanted to know more about it and why it is parked at Shore Plaza, so I asked Steve Elliott, who is the Exmore Chief of Police, and has been a "town cop" in Exmore for 28 years.

Elliott told me, "We got the bus a couple of years back when some of us went across the bay to look at some street equipment for town maintenance. While there, Gerald Pitt Jr. and I saw this bus and thought it would be nice to have as a command center for things like town and school events — any big public events — or special logistics. The bus," Elliott added, "had been set up as a command center for the Norfolk Fire Department and served them until it was replaced. When we came back, we told our mayor, Guy Lawson, about it and he took it from there.

Lawson, mayor of Exmore for over 15 years now, makes his living as a paid firefighter in Norfolk, and so he talked to members of Norfolk city management about the turned-in bus.

"When we went across the bay to pick up some equipment we bought," Elliott continued, "they said, 'Don't forget to pick up your keys to the bus. It's yours.' And so we got the bus for free."

But "free" was just the original price.

"When we got the bus back here," Elliott said, "we knew it was really nice and we were thankful, but we still did work on it. Guy bought blue and white paint, Ernie James of Painter, retired from the Suffolk County, New York, Police Department, did all the graphics, and the rest of us chipped in and bought different things like vents and wiring to make it an operable command center again."

"But why," I asked Elliott, "do you keep the bus at the shopping center?"

"Because," he answered, "it gives us a presence and makes the public think. Having it there, especially over the holidays, makes shoplifters and thieves think twice. A lot of times we'll do some of our paperwork there, too. Will we keep it at Shore Plaza year 'round? No, we'll move it to where we hold the Troy Ashe Pistol Tournament for awhile, and the annual Exmore Yard Sale and other big events that may require security. We even use it for when we do Identi-Kids. The big thing," Elliott emphasized, "is it gives us a positive presence."

And, I thought, probably makes a bad guy think twice.

McCaleb Remarks Were Callous in the Extreme

Dear Editor:

Please, tell me that there was a mistake in the Post edition from Friday, April 10, on Page 5, wherein Accomack Supervisor Phil McCaleb is quoted as saying "he favors cutting school funds in the hopes that more students would be sent to 'Broadwater and these other Christian schools' so the county wouldn't have to pay to educate them."

This despicable comment, coming from a supervisor, goes beyond the pale. McCaleb needs to either retract or immediately clarify his remark with regards to its consummate hubris. How dare he imply that the further decimation of the Accomack County School System's already threadbare budget would result in parents sending children "to Broadwater or these other Christian schools"?

If his was a verbal gaffe, then, by all means, allow the man to apologize to Accomack County schoolchildren's parents, who pay his salary and fully-funded health benefits, for his pompous blurt. However, if this is indeed the man's opinion, then I call him to task on his comment and he must coherently articulate what he meant, advocating other schools for our children so that "the county doesn't have to pay to educate them." Parents (taxpayers and voters) of Accomack County schoolchildren deserve better than this astounding hauteur uttered by McCaleb.

Implicit in his bizarre comment, McCaleb's words show a cavalier disregard for the children of his constituents and the quality of their education. Even worse, his language speaks to a personal deficit vis-à-vis the myriad advantages of a public school education.

It is the duty and responsibility of the county to adequately and fairly fund Accomack County schools. This must always be its priority. When funds are in short supply, the correct response is not the tacit endorsement of alternative or parochial schools either by name or by denomination as a means to save the county money. Such a response engenders disdain for the speaker and conjures up images of very bad accounting practices reminiscent of recent economic debacles.

While the county school budgets undergo yet another round of evisceration by misguided scavengers, teachers continue to buy their own paper clips, marking pens and other supplies required to properly run a classroom. The dilemma is worsened by McCaleb's glib retort and an economy so dire, is duplicitous in the extreme.

Support for Church Outreach Is Appreciated

Dear Editor:

I wish to thank all who supported our recent fundraiser, helping to make it a success. Though we planned to sell a certain amount of dinners, and also have extra to do outreach to sick and shut-ins during these events, I'm glad to say we had sold out of chicken by 2 p.m. while still doing outreach. I do apologize to those who came out later in the day and were not able to purchase their dinners, since we were scheduled to do the dinners until 5 p.m., but we are planning another event next month.

Again, thank you for your support.

Jesus Is Important to All Our Lives

Dear Editor:

I want to thank Sheila Bloxom of Chincoteague who wrote in a recent Letter to the Editor of her feelings regarding taking the name of Jesus Christ out of the opening prayer at meetings of the Accomack County Board of Supervisors. I firmly believe in Jesus Christ and without him I would be lost.

People today are so afraid of what society will think when certain issues arise, such as opening with prayer and saying grace. As one notable Christian singer, Vestal Goodman, said to an audience, "With Jesus in your life, our job will work, your marriage will work, your children will work. It will all flow right when you keep Jesus involved." This applies to business matters as well, in my opinion.

So please, take this letter to heart, and may you be blessed by it through the love of Jesus.

Food Lion Offers Personal Service

Dear Editor:

I would like to publicly thank Keith Justice, assistant manager of Food Lion, and Mark Mapp, grocery manager, who got approval to correct a mistake I made with the ham tickets, as I was in a jam after I had spent and hour calculating the $20 certificate into my budget and didn't realize until I walked into the store that I was one ticket short.

Mark called Keith to explain my situation, as I am a regular customer, and Keith said, "Let her have it," which meant the world to me, as I didn't know how to split my list after an hour of putting it together.

I will say I had a great day at Food Lion when also Mike the meat man, who was new to me, not only cut a special cut of meat, but found me in the aisle to give it to me.

You can't ask for more than that, except for Burley, my outstanding meat cutter for years, who works hard with a joyous smile.

Food Lion cares about its customers with a personal touch.

Tangier Group Looks to Secure Island's Future

Dear Editor:

What is the future of Tangier Island?

Will its culture of hardy watermen thrive? Will part-time residents eventually be a bigger portion of its population than year-rounders?

Will the exit to mainland jobs continue, or will things eventually balance out? Will tourism become its primary industry?

Those are among the driving questions of a new organization, Tangier Pride. Its motto, "Our Island, Our Pride," emphasizes self-help within the community of about 550 residents, but realizes that some challenges require outside involvement.

The historic island, which dates to 1608, is particularly affected by regulations aimed at restoring the Chesapeake Bay. Watermen find it increasingly difficult to make a living there, so a large number is leaving to work on tugs, often relocating their families to the mainland. Young people, who are unable to obtain licenses for crabbing or to find other jobs on Tangier, are lured off by college, the military or employment.

In a letter to Tangier residents and former residents, I said the organization "will concentrate on opportunities that offer jobs and preserve our rich traditions and find new ways to capitalize on our resources."

I grew up on Tangier and retired last year as an editor of the Virginian-Pilot in Norfolk. I live in Suffolk and often visit relatives on the island with my family. Other officers and board members of Tangier Pride live on the island.

Tangier Pride's immediate goal is to become tax-free and obtain grants. The legal work is underway.

With the organization's encouragement, Tangier Town Council recently took preliminary steps for a grant to study the future of a building that now houses Tangier Health Center, which is being moved to a new structure.

We need to know the highest and best use of this property. With planning money from the town and grants obtained by Tangier Pride, residents could brainstorm uses of the building, come to consensus, and the town and Tangier Pride could fund the project.

Tangier Pride plans to host community sessions to identify how to capitalize on island assets and how to address top concerns of the residents.

With a dwindling population, the pressure of bay regulations and social changes, the Town Council alone cannot address all these concerns. Instead of "they," who will determine our future? It must be increasingly "we."

In the letter to residents and former residents, Tangier Pride asked for contributions for matching funds, which would increase Tangier's chance of success to obtain grants. Contributions can be sent to Tangier Pride, c/o Danny McCready P.O. Box 3, Tangier, VA 23440.

Even in these difficult economic times, Tangier Pride believes the need for fund-raising now is urgent. In most instances, grant makers require conviction that the applicant is trying to help itself, and that is where this fundraising effort comes in.

Let's Stop Promoting Tourism on the Shore

Dear Editor:

I read with disgust the statement, "There was support for tourism" in a front-page article. Worse yet, there was an article in the previous week's Post concerning the construction of a new Welcome Center down near the bridge-tunnel system. No thanks.

Who are the people supporting more tourism in this area? I have to assume that they are people who have restaurants and T-shirt shops and only make up a small percentage of the total population here on the Eastern Shore.

I personally watched the total annihilation of the central part of the Florida Panhandle by the tourism industry. In a mere 15 years, the amount of traffic, pollution, and over-development of a once beautiful area forced many people who were not employed in the tourist industry to move away. This is easily substantiated. I chose the Eastern Shore of Virginia as my refuge from tourism. I love it here. Just as it is.

Check out the road approaching Chincoteague and Assateague. There are about 70 huge, repulsive, commercial billboards lining one side of the road. Does anyone, anyone at all, think they are attractive? Most would agree that they are an eyesore. They should each have a conspicuous logo of a turkey vulture representing their true purpose.

I, for one, would like to see the entire bridge-tunnel system dismantled and replaced with a very nice, upscale ferry system, greatly reducing the traffic on Rt. 13. How many local people are interested in going to Assateague Island in the summer time? On the weekends there is no place to park at the beach and the entire area is flooded with hordes of tourists.

Maybe this issue of increasing tourism should be put to a vote. Well, here's my vote in advance: No to more tourism.
