Chincoteague Carnival Opens This Weekend

The smell of funnel cake and sounds of giggling kids will fill the warm, summer air surrounding the Chincoteague Carnival grounds once again as the Chincoteague Volunteer Fire Company opens its gates for the 94th season, beginning this weekend.

Ninety-four years is a long time. To be one of the longest running volunteer summer carnivals in the state, and possibly the U.S., is yet another reason on the extensive list of things that make Chincoteague the choice for many to flock to during the warmer months.

The carnival first planted its roots in 1925 after the town experienced two severe fires, one in 1920 and another in 1924, leaving parts of the island in total destruction and devastating residents, who in turn, were forced to acknowledge the need for better fire equipment and resources. Because of

Misty's Barn Burns Tuesday Night - All Horses Safe

By Linda Cicoira

The Chincoteague Island barn where the famous wild pony, Misty, once lived, burned to the ground late Tuesday night, according to spokesperson Denise Bowden, of the Chincoteague Volunteer Fire Department. Two houses in the vicinity suffered some exterior damage. There were no injuries.

The barn belonged to members of the Beebe family, who are also an important part of the book, "Misty of Chincoteague" by Marguerite Henry. "All horses were accounted for as well as one goat," Bowden said. It was "an iconic structure that to most people looked like any other old barn ... to us it is where our history lived and breathed," she added. Some of the horses are Misty descendants.

The cause of the fire was continuing to be investigated Wednesday. The blaze was reported at around 10:40 p.m. About 50 firefighters including medics responded.

"The fire was attacked from both the north and south side of the structure," Bowden said. "Greenbackville Volunteer Fire Company provided ladder truck support as our ladder truck is out of service due to a hydraulic problem. Units from Chincoteague, Atlantic, Greenbackville, New Church, Wallops NASA base as well as Chincoteague Police were on the scene and remained until the fire was extinguished," Bowden reported.

"When first incoming units arrived on scene, the old Misty barn was fully involved," she continued. "Flames reaching 30 feet in the air" were observed.

Another fire that occurred June 14, on the island, involved a house in the Wildcat development on the north end of the island. Bowden said that fire is still under investigation. Residents including two dogs were able to safely get out. Two guinea pigs were lost. The six-alarm fire was "hampered by heavy winds" and "exposure problems." Firefighters were recalled to the scene for two days.

Kids' Corral

With Isabella Bono-Evans,
Documented by Krystle Bono

A perfect option for beating the summer heat mid-beach day, Toms Cove Visitor Center on the Assateague Island National Seashore brings a nice, cool way to spend an afternoon hour while the kids can learn about the history of the refuge and its many animal inhabitants.

The visitor center is located on 8586 Beach Road, Chincoteague. You have to travel to Assateague and enter through the Wildlife Refuge (note: as mentioned in our previous column, to enter the refuge, you must have a pass, which can be purchased at the gate for $20 weekly or $40 for the season) and drive all the way down to the beach. It may take you a few minutes to get down there, since there are a few pull-off spots for visitors to stop and check out the wildlife—we have even spotted ponies on our way in during the morning. Once the beach is in view, the visitor center will be on the right, and is the last stop before the beach parking lot.

The center is open to the public daily through November, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and it is completely free to enter, which is another perk for families traveling with lots of littles.

Toms Cove Visitor Center has a ramp that takes you up to the deck and front entrance. Isabella was excited to get inside so she could meet the animals that were housed in the touch-tank, but while en route to the entrance, she was drawn to the viewing telescopes that were positioned outside on the deck, so she took some time to look through those and vigorously tried to locate where the ponies were hiding today, since we didn't see any on our way in. We did, however, spot the herd off in the distance on our way out, which made her pony-loving day. Also along the deck are plaques, much like the ones we found at the Robert Reed Waterfront Park, giving us some interesting historical tidbits from the types of boats used in the area for aquafarming, to some of the nature seen while on the deck.

There are two doors going into the facility, and we entered through the back, which put us right at the touch tank. During our visit, which was later in the afternoon, there was a small crowd gathered around the tank, so we patiently waited—actually, I patiently waited while Bella impatiently stalked the tank for her opportunity to squeeze in once a spot opened—and I looked at the other exhibits. It's a small studio-type building, so I was able to look at other things while still being close enough to Bella to have eyes on her.

Once she saw her opening, she took it, and thankfully for us, everyone cleared the area a few moments later, so we had the tank to ourselves, briefly. She instantly dipped her arm in, but then realized she couldn't quite see what she was trying to get. The water is a little murky, so it's best to look through the glass first to see where the animals are situated and then dive in, because there are two horseshoe crabs in there, and you definitely want to steer clear of their tails!

Bella started with the larger of two whelks. Whelks look like conchs, but are actually very different, as whelks are carnivores and prefer colder water, and conchs are herbivores and prefer more tropical environments. They were huge. She had never seen the animal that takes up residence in the shells she collects, so she thought that was the neatest thing to see the slimy, slug-like creature that was hiding inside. She held the shell very still up over the water for a few minutes to try and see if it would come out. (Note: There are signs stating that when touching the animals, you must hold them over the water. We did notice people taking them out away from the tank, as well as dropping them back in, and all of that is absolutely not okay. Visitors are reminded that these are living beings, and should be treated as such, and with care.) After holding the whelk steady for a few minutes, it decided to slide its way back out so she could see it. She gingerly put it back in its home, and then checked out the clams, mussels, and finally, the horseshoe crabs. She had only seen one that had died on the beach, so she has never gotten to be up close to a living one. Bella loves animals, but she was a little hesitant about picking up this guy by herself, between the tail and not wanting to hurt it. They weren't the easiest to get ahold of and were trying to wriggle away. You have to pick them up with two hands, and this is instructed on the sign, so, once I got it, we kept it out long enough for her to pet and admire for a moment before we returned it to the tank.

Once we finished at the tank, we dried our hands and moved on to the fish tank beside it, and then to view the rest of the center. Another highlight of the venue is the "Treasures of Assateague" sand box, which is along the right wall of the center, and for kids to do a treasure hunt of their own and dig through the sand to find the items that are listed on the wall and match to what they are finding. Bella enjoyed that as well, and learned a lot of new things by seeing the different parts of the animals close up.

Also in the visitor center is a ranger-staffed information desk, lots of brochures, a book and souvenir gift shop, a board with daily ranger-led activities, and calendars of what is happening around the islands by the front entrance. This is definitely a nice spot to take the kids during your daytrip to the beach and Bella highly recommends venturing inside to learn and meet the marine life that live in the surrounding waters!

this, the town authorized the Chincoteague Volunteer Fire Company to be formed, and they were approved to host a carnival during pony penning week to help raise funds to go toward their needs. The auction sold 15 colts to help benefit the fire company on top of the carnival proceeds, and the carnival itself ended up being extremely successful, and thus paved way for it to become an annual event. Over the years, the carnival offered pony rides and nightly pony races on top of the usual carnival attractions, drawing bigger crowds with every year that passed.

From its inception, the carnival and Pony Penning has evolved into what we all know and love today, with a string of events that attracts visitors from across the country.

The carnival grounds are located at 3648 Main St., Chincoteague, and aside from rides for all ages to enjoy, there are plenty of games to be played, including bingo, live entertainment, and a variety of food for sale, such as fresh clam and oyster fritters, hot dogs, and pizza. It now runs for a month from the last weekend in June through Pony Penning week, which falls during the last Wednesday and Thursday of July. This year, it will be open June 28-29, July 3-6, 12-13, 19-20, and will be open during Pony Penning week, July 22-27, from 7 to 11 p.m.

CHINCOTEAGUE ISLAND ARTS ORGANIZATION ANNOUNCES MONDAY NIGHT PROGRAMS

Submitted Article

The Chincoteague Island Arts Organization announced a summer-long series of Monday night programs in the Island Theatre Annex at 4076 Main Street. "Monday Nights at Main and Mumford," sponsored by the Eastern Shore Post, will consist of diverse performances and programs starting at 7 p.m. each Monday.

The first program in the series will be on July 1 and will feature the 56-minute award-winning documentary film, "The Wild Ponies of Chincoteague," the heartwarming story of a young woman who was able to acquire a Chincoteague pony with the help of the Feather Fund and how her experience allowed her to overcome her bouts of severe depression. The film director, Kurt Kolaja, will be in attendance to lead an interactive discussion of how the film came about. He will also show his short film about the fishing boats and crews that leave Chincoteague harbor to harvest the bounty of the Atlantic. Admission is $5 (children under 12 accompanied by an adult admitted free).

Future Monday programs include musical performers, a magician, lecturers, a puppet show, and two special evenings celebrating the 50th anniversaries of the Apollo 11 moon landing and Woodstock. Some programs are offered through arrangements with Sundial Books and the Chincoteague Island Library. Admission prices will vary with each program. Visit www.ciarts.com or its Facebook page for more information.

Fishing from the Shore

By Bill Hall

The cobia bite in the lower Chesapeake Bay remains strong, but bait fishermen can expect an increasing level of shark bycatch as the water temperatures approach tropical summertime levels. Spanish mackerel continue to expand their range and can now be found just below the waters of Pocomoke Sound. Flounder fishing on the seaside has improved as the winds subsided and the waters cleared, and offshore, catches of large dolphin (mahi) and yellowfin tuna have been the norm.

Chincoteague – Jimmy Vasiliou, from Captain Steve's Bait & Tackle, reported that the vessel White Lightning with Captain Frank Murphy returned to port with a catch of blueline tilefish, some of which qualified for citation awards. Captain Bob, aboard the Miss Stella, and Captain John, aboard the Close Enough, had catches of yellowfin tuna and gaffer dolphin from the canyon. The inshore wrecks are starting to produce catches of flounder. Large strip baits, jumbo bullminnows, and salmon-colored Gulp baits have been the best producers. The pier at Tom's Cove has been producing catches of spot and puffer fish. Off the beach, large rays and sharks have made their seasonal appearance. Sharks to 6 feet and been caught and released, while some even larger have been broke off in the suds.

Donna Rae Roeske, at Captain Bob's Marina, reported that flounder fishing improved over the week, a result of the better fishing conditions. Drifting from buoy 17 north to the town fishing pier has proved to be a productive area, as well as the channel in Wire Narrows. Variations of live minnows, Gulp baits, smelt, shrimp, and squid soaked in peeler oil have all been effective. Kingfish (whiting) and flounder have been caught in the waters between Mariner's Point and buoy 15 and between buoys 11 and 14. Lots of coastal sharks have been encountered on both sides of the inlet. Bluefin tuna, yellowfin tuna, and dolphin have been caught from the Parking Lot to the Canyon. The structure at Blackfish Banks is holding flounder, spadefish, and triggerfish.

Upper Shore – Allan Ring, at the Sea Hawk Sports Center, reported that this week has basically been a repeat of last week when it comes to the fishing action. The one difference was the report of Spanish mackerel being caught in the Chesapeake Bay as far north as Occohannock Creek by anglers high speed trolling with Clark spoons. Ring said that the cobia bite continues with anglers enjoying success using cut bunker with bunker chum. Sand mullet (whiting) and spot have been the primary bottom fishing catches on top and bottom rigs baited with bloodworms. The shallows are still holding speckled trout and small to medium-sized stripers. Casting jig heads with paddletail grubs, Mirrorlures, and suspending twitch baits have all proved effective, especially early in the morning and around structure. On the seaside, Ring said that the flounder fishing continues to be "very good," especially around the inlets, with anglers using variations of minnows, silver-sides, and Gulp baits.

Wachapreague – A spokesperson from Trident Tackle reported that the flounder fishing has "picked up considerably!" The shop had weighed in flounder weighing over five and a half pounds over the week. "The customers are much happier," the spokesperson said. Kevin Thomas registered a white marlin release while fishing with Captain Dale Dirks aboard the Heat Wave. The vessels that have ventured offshore have done well with catches of large dolphin (mahi) and yellowfin tuna.

Lower Shore – Jeb Brady, at Bailey's Bait & Tackle, reported that cobia fishing remains steady with anglers catching a lot of 40-44-inch class fish. He recommended targeting the fish in the waters around buoy 36-A and on Latimer Shoal. Spadefishing has picked up with some nice catches coming from the waters around the fourth island of the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel. Positive reports of flounder catches were coming from the Ditch. The shop weighed in a 4.7-pound gray triggerfish caught by Ron Anson on a nearshore wreck. The Cape Charles pier has been producing keeper sand mullet (whiting) and small croakers.

Mark Snook, of Chris' Bait & Tackle, reported that there has been a "bunch" of sea mullet caught near the little bridge, with croakers coming from the Concrete Ships and out of Oyster. Kayakers have had success catching sheepshead around the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel. Cobia are still abundant from the bridge-tunnel north to Cape Charles. There have been a few speckled trout to 16 inches caught in Cherrystone Creek, while anglers trolling spoons have encountered red drum a little farther up the bay, near the mouth of Occohannock Creek. A few tarpon have been spotted in their normal haunts off Oyster.
