Coast Guard Legacy Is Strong on Island

The Coast Guard ignites the kickoff signal, a red flare that signifies the start of the Annual Pony Swim.

By Krystle Bono

July is a month to honor our nation's independence and the many sacrifices our service men and women have made and continue to make in order for us to spend the day soaking up the rays and grilling out with family, all topped off with a patriotic show of fireworks. For Chincoteague residents, it is also a month to celebrate the past and the present, fusing together the island's history and rich culture with the advances they have paved for today. The Chincoteague Coast Guard plays a pivotal role on the island helping keep the waters safe, especially during the annual pony penning when the world-famous ponies hit the water for their 600-foot ocean swim.

The line of buoys that marks the ponies' path connecting from one island to the other is put in place days before the swim by the crew of the Chincoteague Coast Guard. They also release the kickoff signal, a cloud of red smoke that prompts the salt-water cowboys to herd the ponies into the water. The Coast Guard members are then responsible for enforcing the safety zone around the channel to protect the ponies as they make their renowned swim. Once the ponies are safely out of the water and the crowds have cleared the area to head into town for the parade to the carnival grounds, the Coast Guardsmen retreat back to their present station, located on Main Street.

Kids' Corral

With Isabella Bono-Evans,
Documented by Krystle Bono

It was opening weekend at the Chincoteague Volunteer Fire Company's annual carnival, so we fueled up on some local eats and headed out to the grounds to enjoy the festivities. Like most kids, Isabella was super excited, so excited that she asked me once every hour if I, too, was excited to go to the carnival. We double-checked the weather before we planned which night to go, and we triple-checked it the day of, to make sure things were still looking good, due to our track record of going on stormy nights. Things were shaping into being a great night.

We arrived right at 7 p.m. Saturday night, when they open, and it was already packed. Bella stopped to pose beside the rearing in memoriam statue of Surfer Dude that greets you as you enter, and then hurried us over to the ticket booth, which is located in the center of the grounds, because apparently, she needed to start riding rides stat! Tickets are $1.50 each, and most rides take 2-4, so we opted for the $15 bracelets. I like riding rides, too. (Note: there are signs posted for height limits for the rides, which will prohibit some kids from riding without an adult. Also, everything is cash only, so either make sure to bring some, or there is an ATM conveniently located by the flag pole, located by the entrance.)

Once we had our bracelets on, Bella quite literally dragged me to what she has now dubbed her favorite ride of the night, the octopus. She ended up riding it at least four times. Situated on the farthest end inside the building, there was no wait time yet, so we were able to hop right on. This one swings you back and forth, and then loops all the way around, then reverses. By this time, most rides were up and running, and had a wait. We chose the tilt-a-whirl next, my favorite, and we ended up having two-rides wait time ahead of us. That seemed to be about what everything was through the rest of the night, giving about a 10-minute wait.

Next up, we rode the paratroopers. Nope, not doing that one again. I should have known better since there were no adults in line when we were waiting, and they instead were gathered around the fence watching and shaking their heads in a manner that should have been a foreshadow for what was to come. The bad thing is, Bella asked what we should ride next, and I picked it. I love thrill rides and will ride anything but the scrambler, which, coincidentally, makes me sick. It was all fun at first. By the last couple times around though, the spins and the jerks began giving me the same lurching feeling I got on my last not-so-pleasant ride on the scrambler. I looked at Bella and remember muttering, "okay that's enough of this." We got off and went for a walk over to see the pony being housed in the back carnival paddock. Bella laughed and said maybe we shouldn't do that one again, I agreed that was probably a good idea. I evidently can't go on certain rides at 30 the way I could when I was 20. Lesson learned. We went and got ice cream and took a break.

After ice cream, Bella played a couple of games; most cost two to five dollars. She won a stuffed unicorn and two other smaller prizes. Her grandparents came along, too, and she rode the merry-go-round with her Mimi, and the Ferris wheel with her grandad. She also rode the octopus again and the wave coaster. There were a good variety of rides for kids of all ages and sizes, and the layout is spacious, which is great considering the amount of people who were in attendance. There is a smaller balloon Ferris wheel, spinning monkeys, a slide, teacups, ponies, and more. Because the carnival is open until 11 p.m., Bella got to ride everything age related at least once. It seemed the most popular rides were the paratroopers, tilt-a-whirl, and octopus. Food options included clam and oyster fritters, hamburgers, hot dogs, ice cream, and more.

Lightning began to show up in the distance around 10:30 p.m., causing a few outdoor rides to shutdown, but we were ready to head out by that time anyway. Things seemed to really thin out around 10 p.m. Bella rode once more on the Ferris wheel and then we headed out. All-in-all, it was a successful, fun-filled evening of family time.

It was said that opening night, which was the night prior to when we went, was a record for the company's 94 years of operation. All proceeds made also go directly to the fire company to purchase equipment and to allow the citizens of the island to not pay a fire tax. If you see members of the company, be sure to thank them for their volunteered hours of time spent putting this event together and running it while in session—it's the best carnival experience we've had, and we have been to many. We hope to go back again before the end of the season and ride the trolley so we don't have to worry about parking. Obviously this is meant for kids of all ages, but there are plenty of options for adults, too, including bingo! Make sure to pack the family up and plan a night out to the carnival, open through the end of pony penning week (carnival dates and times can be found on page 4), you won't be disappointed.

Constructed in 1874, the original station was situated on the southern end of Assateague and was the area's station until January 1967, when it was decommissioned and became part of the Assateague Island National Seashore. Due to changes in the region's landscape, the Assateague Beach Coast Guard Station was relocated to Toms Cove in 1922 for better preservation. Station 150 includes a station house, boathouse, lookout tower, several service buildings, and its own dilapidated pier and boardwalk from many years of weathering the elements. In 2015, it joined the list of National Register of Historic Places.

Assateague Lighthouse, another historically acclaimed landmark that has been webbed into the Island's culture, is maintained by the Coast Guard as an active navigational aid, but in 2004, ownership was transferred to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Chincoteague National Wildlife Refuge is responsible for preserving its structural integrity.

Many Coast Guard retirees have remained residents of Chincoteague, and because of the abundance of veteran Coast Guardsmen, the annual Coast Guardsmen of Yesteryear Breakfast was born, held every Saturday morning before Veterans Day at Chincoteague Combined School since 1999. Last year's breakfast served 65 with a combined 1,095 years of service, and attendees enjoyed time well spent remembering those lost, paying tribute to those current, and meeting new faces that will continue to uphold the Coast Guard's island legacy.

Fishing from the Shore

By Bill Hall

Look for some explosive fishing over the Fourth of July weekend as the off-shore action continues to heat up. Gaffer dolphin, yellowfin and bigeye tuna, and blue and white marlin action are available to vessels trolling the canyon waters, while tilefishing is still productive for deep droppers with proven GPS numbers. Cobia catch numbers have started to take their midsummer slump as the fish remain in the area but are not as aggressively feeding. The Spanish mackerel fishing continues to improve with fish being caught in the bay as far north as Onancock and in the ocean up to Assateague Island.

Lower Shore – Jeb Brady, at Bailey's Bait & Tackle, reported that cobia fishing had declined over the last week as anglers reported an influx in the number of sharks. Keeper-sized fish were landed out of Cape Charles. Jeb said that the Spanish mackerel fishing is still improving for those anglers who have mastered the method of high-speed trolling with spoons. Flounder fishing also improved in the areas around the "ditch" and along the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel. "Nice-sized" triggerfish are being caught on some of the inshore wrecks; the shop weighed in one trigger the weekend in excess of four pounds.

Mark Snook, of Chris' Bait & Tackle, reported that there were still plenty of cobia near the bridge-tunnel and up off Cape Charles, with "decent" numbers of sea mullet (whiting) and croaker coming from off of Oyster and out of Kiptopeke. A few small black drum remain in the channel out of Oyster. The Kiptopeke State Park pier was producing croaker, sea mullet, bluefish, and ribbonfish. The Plantation Light structure and the fourth island of the bridge-tunnel have a nice population of spadefish added Snook.

Chincoteague – Peter Vasiliou, at Captain Steve's Bait & Tackle, reports that flounder fishing has remained productive with some keeper flatfish being taken in the vicinity of the town pier. The inshore wrecks are producing good numbers of spadefish and triggerfish, while keeper flounder are hanging near the submerged structures on Blackfish Banks. Black sea bass fishing has been good on the offshore wrecks. Catches of dolphin (mahi) have come from the Parking Lot, east to the canyons. The Assateague surf as well as the back bay are holding a variety of sharks, including dusky, sandbars, blacktips, and Atlantic sharpnose.

Donna Rae Roeske, at the Captain Bob's Marina, reports that plenty of flounder are being caught but finding fish in excess of the 16.5-inch minimum size limit has been a real challenge. She said that it appears that the bigger fish are in the process of moving to deeper, cooler waters. Roeske said the Spanish mackerel have arrived outside the inlet, with a few even making the journey to the inside waters. Catches were made by anglers trolling spoons as well as jigging with smelt and finger mullet. The kingfish (whiting) run is still strong, especially in the area between buoys 14 and 11, where a few croaker and spot are also showing up in the catches. Coastal sharks are abundant from inside the inlet out to Turner's Lump, while Blackfish Banks is producing flounder, triggers, sea bass, and spadefish. Larger black sea bass are being pulled from the wreck on the Parking Lot and over the Marine Electric. Yellowfin tuna action is starting to shift from trolling with ballyhoo to chunking with butterfish from east of the Parking Lot out to the canyons, where gaffer dolphin are also being included in the catch.

Wachapreague – Captain Lindsay Paul, at Trident Tackle, reports that flounder fishing has picked up, with almost everybody catching a few keepers. The nearshore wrecks are starting to produce keeper flounder as well. Yellowfin and bigeye tuna, as well as a few marlin have been caught in the canyons. The vessel Bite Me landed several false albacore and dolphin (mahi) while trolling over the Hills and the Lumpy Bottom. Deep droppers were finding bluelined tilefish. The Eastern Shore Marlin Club's Annual Billfish Release Tournament is scheduled for July 25-29. For registration information, call 757-710-0129.

Upper Shore – Captain Matt Abell, at the Sea Hawk Sports Center, reported that flounder fishing both on the inside and around the rail cars has been "very good." Dolphin (mahi) fishing has been productive from the inshore lumps to the canyons. Tuna fishing in the canyons was described as "hit or miss," with some boats limiting out while other boats returning to port empty-handed. Abell said that the cobia bite in the lower Chesapeake Bay has fallen off considerably over the last week. He attributed the decline to an increase in spawning activity but noted that sight fishing was out-producing bait and chum fishing. Spanish mackerel were increasing their northern range in the bay, with the best action occurring from the mouth of Pungoteague Creek south. Speckled trout catches were still being made in the shallows of the upper Pocomoke Sound and lower Tangier Sound.

Bill Hall was the first Eastern Shore resident to achieve Virginia Salt Water Master Angler Status. He has been named Virginia Saltwater Angler of the Year and Virginia Saltwater Release Angler of the Year. Bill is an I.G.F.A. International Committee Representative and a long-time member of the Virginia Saltwater Fishing Tournament Committee. He is the Virginia Recreation Fishing representative on the ASMFC Striped Bass Management Panel and is a past recipient of the CCA-VA Virginia Outdoor Writer Conservation Leadership Award.
