The Chincoteague Volunteer Fire Company was awarded the Spirit of Virginia award, saluting its “uncommon contributions” to the state, in a ceremony Friday at the fire station.

First Lady Suzanne Youngkin presented the award, the fifth given since her husband, Gov. Glenn Youngkin, took office. The Youngkins attended the annual Chincoteague Pony Penning in July and witnessed firsthand the famous event, which is organized by the fire company.

The award recognizes “unique qualities and standout achievements across the Commonwealth and (salutes) Virginians for their uncommon contributions in private industries, education, culture, the arts, and philanthropy,” according to its description.

Suzanne Youngkin said Chincoteague volunteers are part of a 44,000-strong fire service in Virginia, 75% of whom are volunteers.

“Here we are on your island to say thank you, to glorify the things that have happened here for over 100 years,” she said.

“What you do is selfless; it’s beautiful; it glorifies every single resident in the Commonwealth of Vir-

New program, funding target old buildings

BY CAROL VAUGHN
Eastern Shore Post

A pilot program to remove derelict buildings in Whitesville will make use of funds the Accomack County Board of Supervisors set aside in the fiscal year 2022 budget.

Accomack County Administrator Mike Mason told the board removal of dilapidated structures is among community revitalization efforts recommended in the recently released Eastern Shore Regional Housing Study.

The board approved $150,000 for derelict building removal in the 2022 budget.

On a list of seven communities the board previously identified as priorities for housing rehabilitation, Whitesville has the highest concentration of dangerous, derelict buildings, based on staff visits to each location, Mason said.

The county approached the Davis Center, a Whitesville nonprofit organization, about partnering on the pilot program, according to Mason. He said Davis Center representatives indicated they are willing to administer the program, which if successful could be deployed to other areas of the county.

The Davis Center identified 11 buildings for possible demolition.

A memorandum of understanding will be negotiated between Accomack and the Davis Center; it likely will be brought to the board of supervisors for approval next month, Mason said.

“It’s an excellent program. ... I would like to see Bayside community in that program

County starts new chapter on library building contract

BY CAROL VAUGHN
Eastern Shore Post

Accomack County has terminated its contract with the company that was building the new library in Parksley.

The Accomack County Board of Supervisors after an executive session Wednesday voted to terminate the construction contract with R.H. Contracting Inc.

The project has been plagued with delays, supply chain issues, including pandemic-related problems, and other problems after ground was broken in October 2019.

The 20,837-square-foot library will be the regional headquarters for the Eastern Shore Public Library system as well as home to the new Eastern Shore of Virginia Heritage Center.

It is located at 24313 Bennett St., at the site of a former Fresh Pride grocery store.

In an Oct. 20 letter to the president of R.H. Contracting, the Cincinnati Insurance Company, and Yorktown attorney David Hearne, Accomack County Administrator Michael Mason said the county "is lifting the suspension of its previous notice of intent to terminate" the contract and declaring default by the contractor.

The county's grounds for terminating the contract include failure to complete the project by the July 29 deadline set out in a memorandum of understanding; defective work, including a roof that continues to leak; and unpaid subcontractors.

The letter says Accomack officials are aware of "at least two subcontractors who claim not to have been paid in a timely manner."

The letter constitutes a claim on the performance bond for the library construction contract, issued by the insurance company Sept. 12, 2019, in the amount of around $4.3 million. Along with change orders issued since, the contract value totals nearly $4.8 million.

According to the terms of the performance bond, the county agrees to pay the balance of the contract price to either the insurance company or to another contractor selected to complete the building.

The amount is around $226,000.

The county also reserves its right to collect "significant liquidated damages under the contract," according to the letter.

Representatives from Accomack County and the insurance company were set to meet Monday to discuss how to proceed, according to Mason.

"Once a claim on the performance bond has been made, the surety is largely in control of options available under the bond," Mason said in an email Friday.

A contract surety bond typically is used to guarantee the performance of a contractor for a construction contract. If the contractor falls through, the surety company must secure another contractor to complete the project or reimburse the project owner for any financial loss.

sometime in the future," said Supervisor Robert Crockett.

Supervisor Ron Wolff called the program "a novel idea" to address "an old existing problem" in the county — derelict buildings.

Supervisor Paul Muhly, who represents Whitesville, said, "We're extremely fortunate to have the Davis Center people involved because they have proven what they can do."

State law allows the county to contribute to a nonprofit organization for the purpose of community development.

Under the pilot program, dangerous buildings will be demolished and the debris removed.

Participation by property owners will be voluntary; the county has not taken any enforcement action on any of the properties.

Saxis voters will have choice for mayor

BY CAROL VAUGHN
Eastern Shore Post

Saxis voters have a choice for mayor in the Nov. 8 election.

The town is one of four in Accomack County with contested mayoral elections.

Incumbent Denise L. Drewer faces challenger William J. Sprowl Jr. in the Saxis mayoral race.

Each candidate answered questions posed by the Eastern Shore Post.

Their responses are below.

■ Tell us a little bit about yourself, including your qualifications to be mayor.

Drewer: I have been a resident of Saxis for the past 34 years after my marriage to Andy Drewer, a lifelong resident and business owner. We have one daughter and three wonderful grandchildren.

I have been the mayor for the past 12 years after initially stepping in as interim mayor when Charles Tull unexpectedly passed away.

As a resident and business owner I am in a unique position to understand the issues and concerns of all of our citizens of Saxis. My standing record of accomplishments over these past 12 years qualifies me as the proper candidate to serve the people of our community.

Sprowl: I'm 60 years old. I was born and raised in New Jersey. I moved to Pennsylvania. I lived there about for eight or nine years, then moved to Stuart, Va. I lived there from 2012 until two years ago, when I moved here. I bought a house here.

I was an over-the-road truck driver. I did that for quite a few years. I was in the Air Force. (He was discharged due to his father's serious illness).

I do a little bit of handy work, a little bit of construction. I've been doing that quite a few years.

In New Jersey, I was chief executive officer for the Human Service Advisory Commission (of Ocean County). I served four years doing that for the county.

I was appointed by the Republican Committee to serve on the Recreation Advisory Committee in Berkley Township, New Jersey. I served four years doing that. I was the chief executive chair of that.

I was a hunter education instructor. I did a lot of things like that.

Right now, I'm the vice president of our Saxis Fire Department.

Also, I didn't get elected but I ran for school board (in New Jersey).

■ Why do you want to be mayor?

Drewer: There have been many accomplishments over my past 12 years. As mayor I am confident we can continue to progress, especially because of my rapport and affiliations with acquaintances at the county and state level.

Sprowl: I want to better our community. I want to serve the people, not just our clique. ... I want an open-door policy with my community. I want to get involved with the community. I want to help our community out — every individual, not just the chosen few.

■ What do you think are the top (one to three) priorities on which your town's officials should be focusing right now?

Drewer: The top priority for Saxis is the mitigation of our eroding shoreline that surrounds the town. There are many aspects of this project that will require affiliations with various environmental and government groups. This major undertaking is going to require a strong and knowledgeable mayor already familiar with the personnel and grants and inner workings of the appropriate agencies.

Sprowl: We have very bad beach erosion. One of the things I'd like to do is see if there is something that we can do to protect the community in certain areas because the water gets up on the island pretty bad and I think we can raise those banks a little bit, probably put in some concrete blocking or whatever we have to do to slow the erosion down.

Another things we need, too, is some form of law enforcement in our community. We have people, from the outside mostly; we have a FedEx driver that does 50 miles per hour in our community... So I'd like to see about getting a small law enforcement, maybe one part-time officer or something like that.

■ What is your town's greatest asset?

Drewer: Saxis Island's greatest asset is the strength and support of our community of residents and business owners working and living in this quaint, historical town where we have been successful in maintaining property values at affordable levels. Additionally we continue to be able to offer free fishing off of our 200-foot T pier, sitting by the harbor or picnicking at our public pavilion, full use of clean restrooms and public beach access for swimming and treasure hunting while watching gorgeous sunsets.

Sprowl: The greatest asset, really, right now, we have Capt. E's. We have people that come from all over to go to that restaurant to eat. The town is quiet; it's a laidback community.

■ What is the greatest challenge facing your town?

Drewer: Our top priority as mentioned earlier is shoreline retention.

This is also our greatest challenge. This is a multi-level project requiring input from many experts from various agencies and available grants to accomplish this major undertaking.

Sprowl: We have a lot of natives on our island and we have a lot of "come-heres." The challenges that we have a lot of times is a lot of the natives here don't welcome us here very well.

A lot of things that I want to do or some of the changes — because the natives here do not like change — I want to see the old Saxis again and the only way I would be able to do that is get the input from the people that grew up here, and they're not very talkative people, so I'd have to do a lot of research and things like that to warrant that challenge.

They had a general store on the island. They had a movie theater, things like that. I want to bring that back. We do need to have a small general store here on the island, especially when the causeway floods out and people need the essentials.

■ Why should people vote for you in this contested mayoral race?

Drewer: As mayor for the past 12 years I have proven my abilities to enhance and make improvements in our town. I, as mayor, am especially proud of the fact that we have raised funds as a result of our annual oyster roast with the profits going directly back to the town for the beautification and improvements on Saxis without using any taxpayer dollars. I believe as mayor I have the expertise to not only continue this annual fundraiser but have the knowledge to facilitate ongoing projects and forge ahead because of the various relationships I continue to maintain in order to ensure Saxis continues on an upward path for success.

Sprowl: We've had a mayor in this office now for 10 years. I think she's running out of ideas and I think it's time for somebody with some fresh ideas to move the town forward — and I have the fresh ideas to do it.

ginia; it glorifies every single resident in the United States of America; and it exemplifies what God has called us each into in our lives here on Earth," Youngkin said.

The governor accompanied the First Lady at the ceremony, which included Ruth Shrieves singing the National Anthem; a Coast Guard color guard; and remarks by the governor; Bryan Rush, Chincoteague Emergency Services director; J. Wesley Jeffries, a longtime fire company member; and Ashley Lappin, among the company's youngest members.

Jeffries, who joined the CVFC in 1974, said, "If you happen to meet a Chincoteague volunteer fireman, you will most likely have to respond to one of two questions that are asked: 'Hey, have you seen our new firehouse?' or 'How about our magnificent, new firehouse?' For our volunteer firemen, it is genuinely a dream come true that has finally been realized after a path of events where some have been trying and others have been rewarding."

He recounted how the CVFC was started in the mid-1920s "out of sheer panic and dire necessity as consequence of two massive fires that destroyed most of the town as it then existed."

Jeffries praised predecessors whose perseverance ensured the company's survival through the Great Depression; World War II and the Korean conflict; the abrupt closing of the Naval base at Wallops, which resulted in loss of around half Chincoteague's population; and the 1962 Ash Wednesday storm, which destroyed over half the Chincoteague pony herd.

Still, he said, "the good things outweigh the bad."

He listed a number of "bragging rights" that focused on initiatives that bettered the company, protected the community, and cared for the world-famous Chincoteague Pony Penning, which is almost a century old.

Lappin, who also works for the Accomack County Department of Public Safety, said she joined the fire company "as soon as I was able," at 16.

"On an island so small, you wouldn't think that we would be able to make such an impact on the community and surrounding communities like we do, and even farther out, around the globe. Everything we do is for our community," Lappin said, adding receiving the award "is a reminder to all of us that our hard work, dedication, and endless volunteer hours do not go unnoticed."

"It is quite a privilege to be able to stand here and shine a very, very bright light on quiet heroes." Gov. Youngkin said, noting Chincoteague's 10 full-time and 17 part-time paid personnel and 34 volunteers answered 1,300 calls last year.

"We often talk about being that city on the hill — well, I think we have an island on the hill here and I am so proud that it is part of the Commonwealth of Virginia," he said.

Charney, McLatchy vie for mayoral post

BY STEFANIE JACKSON
Eastern Shore Post

Cape Charles' former harbor master and current mayor, William "Smitty" Dize, is not seeking re-election and two candidates are competing for the position: Adam Charney and Tim McLatchy.

Charney is a 10-year resident of Cape Charles with homes in both the town's historic district and Bay Creek. He works for a mortgage company in Virginia Beach.

Tim McLatchy was a longtime visitor of Cape Charles who became a full-time resident of Bay Creek four years ago; he works remotely for a major software company.

This is the first time either candidate has run for a public office, and both Charney and McLatchy have expressed a desire to ensure that every voice in Cape Charles is heard on issues of public interest.

Both support the sale of Cape Charles' water system to private company Virginia American Water, which would get the town out of debt and enable it to invest in improvements to the town harbor, beach, sidewalks, and stormwater drainage systems.

McLatchy noted Cape Charles would get about $16 million to $17 million from the sale of the utility, and Virginia American Water would invest up to $1 million to improve the town's water quality.

Cape Charles has experienced growing pains over the last decade as its economy has come to rely more on tourism and less on industry.

Some citizens have complained that certain businesses, such as the concrete plant on the south side of the harbor, are detrimental to tourism, while others say the industry brings year-round work with good pay and benefits for residents.

The tourism industry has its drawbacks, too. The proliferation of short-term rentals in town has reduced the number of homes available for full-time residents to rent or buy, and property values in Cape Charles have skyrocketed, making the available homes unaffordable for low- and middle-income families.

Yet the concrete plant is "obviously not going anywhere," said Carney, who wants to "turn a problem into a profit" by getting more of the sales tax revenue from the concrete plant to directly benefit the town.

Northampton County currently receives the majority of the sales tax revenue from the concrete plant.

Both candidates also acknowledged that the issue of short-term rentals must be addressed, with McLatchy adding that there are "ample opportunities" to provide affordable housing in the area while allowing tourism to flourish.

He noted that the Town Council recently voted to remove proffers (development restrictions) from the Kerk property near Cassatt Parkway, allowing the construction of 60 housing units.

The former Cape Charles railroad yard, which lies between the town harbor and Mason Avenue, is expected to go up for sale in two to six months, which also could present an opportunity.

Onancock getting new pavilion

Bringing a “cultural possibility” to the Eastern Shore

BY CAROL VAUGHN

Eastern Shore Post

Onancock will soon have a pavilion featuring a 2,000 square-foot stage added to the amenities at the Historic Onancock School.

The pavilion will allow the nonprofit organization to host both free and paid performances by local, regional, and national groups.

The pavilion will include theatrical lighting and sound systems and lawn seating to initially accommodate 500 people.

The pavilion is expected to attract local and regional visitors to Onancock and surrounding towns, resulting in increased revenue for restaurants, shops, and lodging establishments.

HOS at Monday's Town Council meeting asked the town to allocate $100,000 from federal American Rescue Plan Act funds to the project in two distributions, one this year and one in 2023.

Councilwoman Maphis Oswald

asked Town Manager Matt Spuck to study the request and bring back a recommendation to the council.

“Our hope is to ... bring this cultural possibility to the Eastern Shore,” said Joani Donohoe, HOS executive director.

Donohoe told the council the building for 15 years has been a center for artists, artisans, and community groups, with more than 10,000 visitors in 2021 and 2022.

More than 55% of event rentals at HOS are to Black or Latino residents, according to Donohoe's report.

Rick King, an HOS board member and a general contractor, said the plan is to install the foundation for the pavilion this fall, with additional work to be done next spring.

Work already has begun on the foundation. The pavilion will be behind the former school building, near the playground.

He estimated the cost at around $300,000 and said HOS will have a targeted fundraising campaign for the project.

nity for the development of housing, McLatchy said.

Carney's vision for Cape Charles is uniting its communities, from the historic district to Bay Creek and the Marina Villages. One example is the free annual summer concert series in the town park.

Carney also would like to see movie nights at the beach in Bay Creek become a reality, as well as an annual charity golf tournament that is open to all.

He regularly attends meetings of the Town Council and harbor district review board and maintains connections with local homeowners associations, which would be helpful in his quest to bring Cape Charles' communities together.

“It's all Cape Charles. We need to be united,” Carney said.

McLatchy's key interest is in Cape Charles' offerings for youth. The town should offer more activities for youth and improve its relationship with the local public schools. Cape Charles is home to many professionals who could volunteer in schools, he said.

McLatchy regularly attends Town Council and zoning meetings and is a member of the American Legion Post 56. He also enjoys volunteering at Citizens for Central Park events and Heritage Acres.

He noted that his campaign is 100% self-funded because the mayor serves “all the people of Cape Charles ... not just the people who have money.”

SERVING VIRGINIA'S EASTERN SHORE

THE PAPER'S POSITION

Those missed votes can be costly

On the Eastern Shore, you skip voting at your own risk. If you don't cast a ballot, you might end up changing history.

Some among us might remember the contentious Northampton County election of 1968, with liquor-by-the-drink on the ballot. It was quite a donnybrook, with ambitious restaurateurs on one side and abstentious teetotalers on the other.

That's right — since before World War I, it had been illegal on the Eastern Shore to sell mixed drinks at restaurants, motels, and the like.

Northampton County let the voters decide — and they did, by one vote. Those against mixed drinks prevailed, 2,004 votes to 2,003. Four thirsty years later, the ballot passed in Northampton, and Accomack shortly followed suit.

Then there was the consequential special election of 2014, when former Delegate Lynwood Lewis won a seat in the State Senate by 11 votes.

That election ensured the State Senate remained under the control of Democrats by the slimmest of margins. If 12 more people in the district had voted Republican, it would have impacted the entire General Assembly.

Then there was the famous Cape Charles mayoral vote of 2002, when candidates Frank Lewis and Dora Sullivan deadlocked at 134 votes apiece.

The two candidates gathered on Eastville's courthouse green while the voter registrar pulled the winner's name out of a container. Lewis was the victor by sheer chance.

Most recently, in 2018, Matthew Hart defeated Bill Ferguson to be mayor of Onley by one vote, 110-109.

Ferguson then did the remarkable, accepting the vote without questioning it or asking for a recount. It might be the last time in our country's history that a close vote wasn't fiercely contested with accusations, lawyers, and a full-scale ruckus.

Skip the election and you might have a close vote weighing on your conscience. So vote early or head to the polls on Tuesday, Nov. 8, to cast your ballot.

Luria is the person to represent us

To the editor:
U.S. Rep. Elaine Luria has represented Virginia's 2nd Congressional District for two terms and deserves a third term.

Luria has worked effectively to bring needed funds for services essential to the Shore. She has sponsored and supported legislation to improve the lives of our military personnel. She has consistently sponsored and supported legislation to protect our unique Chesapeake Bay environment and to promote flooding prevention in our vulnerable communities.

Luria has worked to expand healthcare coverage and to reduce the cost of prescription drugs. State Senator Jen Kiggans claims to want these same benefits for Americans. She is running as a Republican, the party that has voted numerous times to repeal the Affordable Care Act but in 12 years has never developed a workable alternative. Republicans have consistently voted against allowing Medicare to negotiate drug prices for seniors.

Kiggans does not even have the courage to state that President Joe Biden won the 2020 election legitimately. Since every audit of the election has failed to find significant evidence of fraud, the result is clear and further investigations are a waste of time and money.

The integrity of our elections has been proven. Her insistence on ensuring "election integrity" is a cover for making it more difficult for people to vote.

I have voted for Luria for Congress for Virginia's 2nd District Congressional seat, and I urge registered voters of the district to do the same.

Luria is the person to represent us in Washington. Vote!

Statistics show the impact of households without fathers

More than one in four U.S. children — 19.4 million kids — lives without a father, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

On the Eastern Shore, the single-parent numbers are even more worrisome.

Ted Shockley

Almost 40 percent of Northampton County's children live in single-parent households. In Accomack, almost 33 percent of children have only one parent, an online Census 2020 data aggregator shows.

And those numbers have improved. In 2016 alone, almost 47 percent of Northampton households had only one parent living with the youngsters. In Accomack, it was almost 42 percent.

Some of those local single parents are fathers, of course. But I'd bet most are not.

We've all been inundated this fall with political advertisements and promises during this campaign season.

But nobody seems to be talking about one of the biggest problems facing the Eastern Shore, our region, and our country: the impact of fatherless households, especially on boys.

A girl raised in a fatherless home is seven times more likely to get pregnant as a teenager, according to the National Fatherhood Initiative.

Children of a fatherless home are four times as likely to live in poverty conditions as an adult and twice as likely to drop out of school.

Children with a father at home are at a lower risk for emotional and behavioral problems, incarceration as juveniles, and poor school performance.

Adolescent and teenage boys who live with their fathers are less likely to carry guns and deal drugs, according to the initiative.

And boys of absentee fathers are more likely to become absentee fathers themselves.

Do our politicians have a role in helping fathers? Maybe.

Earlier this year Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis signed a bill allocating $70 million for parental resources and the creation of a "Responsible Father Initiative."

"If you look over the last many decades, one of the worst social trends has been the decline of fatherhood," he said during the signing.

Adding to the concern, New York Times columnist David Brooks wrote last month that men and boys nationwide are struggling with work, life, and their emotions.

Ten million American men with a high-school diploma have dropped out of the labor force. In three out of four suicide and drug deaths, men are the victims, he reported. Boys are also underperforming scholastically.

Brooks cited an idea from the author Richard V. Reeves to have boys begin school a year later than girls "because on average the prefrontal cortex and the cerebellum, which are involved in self-regulation, mature much earlier in girls than boys."

Brooks also reported that "many men just seem less ambitious." Men report having fewer friends and low esteem.

Finding solutions to these issues will help every aspect of Eastern Shore life — from fostering the success of boys in school to getting men successfully into the workforce.

But the main solution will come when fathers are there, day in and day out, for their children and their families. Our Eastern Shore boys and girls deserve it.

that she voted with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi 99 percent of the time.

She's a rubber stamp for President Joe Biden and Pelosi. Any wonder Pelosi put her on the Jan. 6 Committee?

She has been quoted as saying, "Thank God Biden and Harris were elected and they have done a lot of good things."

We may wonder what the good things are. Were they:

■ Biden's ill-conceived and foolish war on fossil fuels, which has led to the highest inflation in 40 years? American refineries are lying idle, Biden is begging foreign dictators for oil, our strategic oil reserves have been depleted to the lowest level in decades, and again there is a rise in gas, diesel, and heating oil prices just in time for winter.

■ Out-of-control crime and chaos in Democratic cities like New York and Philadelphia? Remember the no-cash bail or security required on arrest? Untold police officers were ambushed and murdered last year.

■ The more than two million people who have illegally entered by reason of Biden's open southern border and the tons of cartel drugs that have killed many Americans — all ignored by the national news media and press?

■ The Afghanistan debacle, where Biden exited and left behind, against the advice of his generals, many Americans, Afghan workers, and millions of dollars of American military equipment?

■ A plunging stock market killing retirement accounts and pensions of everyday Americans?

Congresswoman Luria, would you care to specify the "good things" to which you are referring?

Oh — and we are not really interested in talking about your abortion position. Abortion is not what is crippling this country.

Will be voting for Kiggans

To the editor:

So many issues have been standing in the way of our country's prosperity and the time has come for us to pull together and take our country back.

As State Senator Jen Kiggans stated in the debate with U.S. Rep. Elaine Luria, she has been to the border and has seen the crisis first-hand. She knows how the cartels are becoming millionaires, knows the number of rapes and murders occurring and how the families there live in fear for their lives.

Another issue Kiggans addressed in the debate is the fentanyl that is being brought into our country. Now it appears they are using name-brand candy boxes to reach our children and grandchildren. The news announced last week that enough fentanyl has been seized by border agents to "kill every person" in the United States. Think long and hard about this.

Also, at the debate, Kiggans spoke about the fuel prices in our country and how they are rising again. Luria stated in her rebuttal that it was all because of Russian President Vladimir Putin. No, the problem is we have oil in our country that our president and current administration have not allowed to be drilled.

Money has been paid into our government by everyone — especially retirees. When workers retire, they feel secure; however, this is not the case today.

Many cannot afford to pay for their prescription drugs, put food on their tables, get to doctor's appointments or hospitals due to fuel prices, or pay their heating bills this winter. Instead of helping them, money is paid for cell phones for the immigrants.

Former President Ronald Reagan stated, "Times have changed but the basic premise of the Constitution hasn't changed. It is still our blueprint for freedom."

Luria is loyal to the current admin-

Can you really die of fright?

You've heard someone say they were scared to death. "When I saw that snake, I thought I'd die of fright!"

David Lozell
Martin

But can you die of fright?

Yes.

When you are suddenly and seriously frightened, your fight-or-flight response kicks in. This response was developed over millennia of human evolution to aid us in dealing with dangers in the wild. A wolf trying to steal the night's meal? Pick up a club and fight it off. A saber-toothed tiger is sighted, take off running for the nearest tree.

To enable your fight-or-flight actions, your body undergoes massive changes. First, the adrenal glands on top of each kidney start pumping adrenaline throughout your body. Your eyes dilate, your heart rate skyrockets, you breathe faster, blood flow to the brain and muscles increases, you sweat, all your senses are heightened while your sensitivity to pain decreases, and your body starts manufacturing sugar to fuel all the activity.

Meanwhile, calcium, which causes muscles to contract more powerfully, is channeled into your heart.

You are a heart-pumping, totally aware, sweaty warrior ready for anything.

Except for when something goes very wrong. In rare cases, all that adrenalin and calcium can cause your heart to go into ventricular fibrillation, and the heart ends up quivering instead of making coordinated contractions. Without a strong, regular heartbeat, the brain is robbed of blood and oxygen and you can lose consciousness and, yes, die of fright. This can happen even if you're young with no history of heart problems.

But it's not just fright. Any strong emotion or excitement can lead to a fight-or-flight heart failure.

Sports: Cliffhanging soccer matches cause death rates to increase in Holland as fans die from heart attacks during a match's most exciting moments.

Bankruptcy: In 2001, Enron, the energy company, cratered into what was, at the time, the largest bankruptcy in U.S. history. Facing a $400 billion lawsuit, Kenneth Lay and other Enron execs were on the hook for a variety of charges. Lay escaped conviction by dying of the fear of what faced him.

Sex: It's rare (not the sex but the dying from it), but studies show that about 0.6% of all cases of sudden death occur during sex.

Halloween: People have died of heart attacks during haunted house tours at Halloween. And several people have died at Halloween, not from the fight-or-flight response but from the doofus-and-die syndrome.

Like the high school principal in Kansas in 1957. The school had created a haunted house to help the students celebrate Halloween. The plan was to lead the students to a dark room where they would see their principal covered in ketchup blood and simulating being hanged by the neck.

It seemed to be going well. The kids were frightened, and maybe delighted, to see their principal hanging there, struggling and moaning at the end of the rope. A teacher came into the room with a camera. She called to the principal and told him it was a great act.

Except it wasn't. The educator had slipped, the noose had tightened, and the students had witnessed the real-life death throes of their principal.

It's fun to get scared ... until it isn't. Be safe on Halloween.

Will be voting pro-life, anti-abortion

To the editor:

Election Day fast approaches. Increasingly, accusations of extreme and radical policies are once again being made by Democrats against Republicans and all who are pro-life and anti-abortion.

Do you want to know what is extreme and radical? Try these numbers: more than 62 million and more than 330,000.

The first number is the number of abortions (the premeditated murder of the unborn) that have occurred since the Roe vs. Wade decision of 1973.

The second number is the number of abortions performed by Planned Parenthood each year.

Also consider these numbers: Approximately 2% of abortions occur because of rape, incest, or to protect the life of the mother. The overwhelming majority — 98% — are elective decisions made primarily because the baby is unwanted and to allow someone to live differently.

The Bible tells us that we are all (male and female) created in the image of God (Genesis 1:27). The Bible also tells us God knows us even before conception, sees us as we are being formed after conception, has plans for each of us, and that we are fearfully and wonderfully made (Jeremiah 1:5; Psalms 139: 14-16).

Human life has value in God's sight and it is a life, not a choice, at the moment of conception.

Sinking marshes an early indicator for region

To the editor:

In his October 2021 editorial, "More Needs To Be Done for Tangier," former Mayor Gerald Wheatley expresses concern about sinking marshes throughout the Chesapeake Bay watershed.

Wetland and marsh ecosystems in low-lying coastal areas are important environmental indicators.

Widespread salt marshes in the southern Chesapeake Bay region are dependent on tidal dynamics for their existence.

Small changes in either land or sea elevations can alter sediment deposition, plant growth, and the balance between fresh water and seawater.

Land subsidence (sinking) has been observed since the 1940s in the southern Chesapeake Bay area.

Subsidence (lowering of the land surface) continues today at rates of 1.1 to 4.8 millimeters (up to 0.2 inches) per year. This explains why the Delmarva region exhibits among the highest rates of relative sea-level rise along the Atlantic Coast.

Most land subsidence in the United States is caused by human activities.

Two well-studied cases of land subsidence are in Houston and Galveston, Texas, and the Santa Clara Valley in California. Intensive groundwater withdrawals, plus the addition of petroleum extraction in Texas, resulted in sinking up to 10 feet during the 20th century.

Throughout the late 1800s and into the 1920s when two thirds of the Santa Clara Valley was irrigated, ground water levels declined more than 200 feet. Land sinking was first detected in 1933, and spirit-level surveys in 1967 identified land subsidence of 8 feet in 50 years.

Today, land subsidence is measured by the Compaction Recorder. The critical element, the extensometer pipe, is anchored to solid bedrock and enclosed in a protective well casing. Miniscule changes in surface elevation are measured directly.

Recent data indicate land subsidence has been responsible for more than half of the relative sea-level rise measured along the Delmarva coastline. The aquifer system has been compacted by extensive groundwater pumping in the region at rates of 1.5- to 3.7 millimeters per year.

In summary, for low-lying topography, land and sea elevations are in a delicate balance. Small decreases in land elevations and rising sea levels are likely to increase the potential for future flooding along the Delmarva shoreline.

Cancer Care Network

Knowing the three components of early detection may save your life or the life of those you love.

Clinical Breast Exam

At age 25, have a clinical breast exam performed by your health care provider every three years, then yearly beginning age 40.

Mammograms

Begin annual screening mammograms at age 40; earlier if you are at high risk due to personal or family history. Consider tomosynthesis, otherwise known as a 3D mammogram.

Breast Self-Awareness

You know what is normal for your breasts. A change does not always indicate breast cancer. Still, be alert for the following:

- A lump in the breast or under the arm
- Skin changes, including a dimple, redness, or thickening
- Change in breast shape or size
- Nipple discharge
- Scaling or redness of the nipple and/or areola
- Nipple retraction or deviation
- New breast pain

If you notice any of these signs or something that doesn't look or feel quite right, notify your health care provider immediately.

If you are uninsured, unable to qualify for Medicaid or Medicare and unable to afford your annual screening mammogram, please contact our Cancer Outreach Office for assistance at 1-800-520-7006. Riverside is able to offer screening mammograms and cervical cancer screenings at no cost to eligible women through the grant support of the Every Woman's Life program.

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month

BY SARAH BARBAN

Special to the Eastern Shore Post

Oct. 1 marked the beginning of Domestic Violence Awareness Month. Each year, October is a time for Eastern Shore Coalition Against Domestic Violence to highlight its services, update residents on how domestic violence impacts the community, and share how you can mark Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

This Domestic Violence Awareness Month is a milestone for the coalition. The organization's new shelter for survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault at the new Hope Harbor facility will open this month.

The new facility will have 24-hour staff, private rooms with Jack-and-Jill bathrooms, a meditation room, a playground and playroom for children, and a communal kitchen. The facility has a capacity of 34 and currently has its own staff of eight.

Now that the coalition's shelter is complete, renovations have begun on the organization's future administration and advocacy office. The hope is that this new space will be complete by summer of 2023.

The new office will include private offices for the coalition's six advocates, laundry facilities, a food pantry for clients not housed in the organization's shelter, a SANE room where sexual assault survivors can access a Physical Evidence Recovery Kit, and a Child Advocacy Center, where children impacted by sexual violence can be seen by a forensic interviewer.

To learn more about Hope Harbor or the coalition's ongoing capital campaign, please visit escadv.org/hopeharborcapitalcampaign

In addition to opening new facilities that will provide additional services, the coalition continues to assist survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault through a 24/7 crisis hotline, housing and relocation assistance, hospital and courtroom accompaniment, legal advocacy, individual counseling, rape crisis services, services for children impacted by domestic violence, and assistance with day-to-day needs such as food and clothing.

Thus far in 2022, the coalition has answered 253 hotline calls, sheltered 112 adults and children, and served 193 people — and the year isn't over.

On average, the coalition answers 250 hotline calls a year, shelters 150 people and serves 300. These are only the survivors that the coalition helps — there are many more in our community who will never seek services or speak up about their abuse.

Nationally, one in four women and one in seven men experience severe physical violence at the hands of an intimate partner in their lifetime. In addition, 33.6% of Virginia women and 28.6% of Virginia men experience intimate partner physical violence, intimate partner rape, and/or intimate partner stalking in their lifetimes.

This Domestic Violence Awareness Month, the coalition is hoping the local community will help provide words of encouragement to survivors. The agency is requesting that community members send cards with positive messages to P.O. Box 3, Onancock, VA 23417, so that they can be shared with clients staying in the new shelter.

The coalition depends heavily on the local community to keep its doors open and continue serving survivors.

If you're interested in supporting the coalition in other ways, you can mail monetary donations to P.O. Box 3, Onancock, VA 23417; give online by visiting escadv.org/donate or by bringing donations such as food, clothing and household items to 130 Market St. between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

If you'd like to donate larger items like furniture, please call 757-787-1329.

It is time to increase awareness of cyberbullying

BY CAMRYN BUYEA

Special to the Eastern Shore Post

There are many incredible and positive things that come from the technological advances and ease of access to the world that we now have at our fingertips; however, along with these positives also comes many negative and worrisome aspects.

One major area of concern that everyone should know about, especially for those who have children, is the threat of cyberbullying.

According to “What is Cyberbullying” (StopBullying.gov), cyberbullying is defined as “bullying that takes place over digital devices like cell phones, computers, and tablets.”

Cyberbullying can happen across a multitude of platforms, like social media or text messages. Social media, like Snapchat and TikTok, provide a space where individuals can post without much consequence.

Snapchat is one of few social media sites where permanence is not necessarily the case, as it allows for messages to be sent that disappear after a few seconds, providing an extremely easy way for individuals to perpetrate bullying or be a victim of cyberbullying.

There are a few areas of concern with cyberbullying that differ from bullying in person — the first area being that it is constant and persistent.

Devices allow for access constantly, no matter what time or day it is.

Another concern is the permanence of what is posted across most social media. Once it is out there, it is almost always out there forever.

There is also the difficulty of noticing this type of bullying. Cyberbullying doesn't leave bruises or physical signs on the victim. It's hard to spot when someone might be experiencing this type of bullying.

It's important to be aware of the warning signs of cyberbullying and to know how to help if you notice them.

Some warning signs are a significant increase or decrease in device use, avoidance of discussing what people do on their phones, hiding their phones, withdrawing from social activities, or loss of interest.

There are a few steps you can take if you begin to notice these signs, starting with talking to the individual and asking questions about the bullying.

Document everything, take screenshots, and report it.

Report it to the social media app administrators and to the child's school, as most schools have a cyberbullying policy in place.

Finally, give the victim your support.

The Eastern Shore Community Services Board offers outpatient mental health services, telephone counseling, and preventative services that may be beneficial for helping individuals experiencing cyberbullying or other traumatic experiences.

For more information and additional resources, visit the Eastern Shore Community Services Board website at www.escsb.org and you can visit <https://www.stopbullying.gov/cyberbullying/what-is-it>.

Kiptopeke State Park wins Conservation Award

The Garden Club of Virginia presented Kiptopeke State Park with the Conservation Educator Award in recognition of the staff's hard work in an educational environment, mainly in the Big Water Visitor Center.

The educational center provides a learning environment that benefits the community, and the park and staff are recognized for their dedication to conservation education.

The award was presented at the park's Explore Outdoors event on Sept. 24. The park also celebrated its 30th anniversary and Park Manager Sean Dixon said a few words in the afternoon.

"It is an honor to be a recipient of the 2022 Conservation Educator Award," said Dixon. "Staff at Kiptopeke along with members of the Garden Club of the Eastern Shore have worked hard on creating a space for not only the locals but for visitors from all over to learn about the Eastern Shore."

Since its founding in 1920, the Garden Club of Virginia has been working for the protection of natural resources, and its support for Virginia State Parks has been a priority from the beginning.

The Garden Club of Virginia celebrated its 2020 centennial with the completion of a five-year, $500,000 grant to Virginia State Parks projects and programs.

"As Conservation Chairman for the Garden Club of the Eastern Shore, my committee has worked hard to promote Kiptopeke State Park," said Mina Turner. "We applied and were given a grant by the GCVVA in 2020 for the development of the Big Water Visitor Center. My committee applied this past June for the Conservation Educator Award for the Big Water Visitor Center at Kiptopeke and were excited when we were told that we won. We see the value of educating the public about the park and land conservation and truly enjoy working alongside the staff."

The Conservation Educator Award is presented to those who celebrate the beauty of the land, conserve the gifts of nature and challenge future generations to build on this heritage. This award is a recognition award that will promote the ideals of conservation through education.

Unclaimed Capital Credit List

When the Cooperative has margins at the end of the year, those margins are allocated to active members based on their electric usage during that year.

Annually, the board of directors determines if the cooperative is in a financial position to distribute any margins or capital credits back to members. Capital credits are then retired and given to the members in the form of a bill credit, and in the case of an inactive member, a check.

We have many former members that have checks awaiting them, but are unable to mail those checks because we no longer have a valid address on file. If you think you are one of those members please follow the link below or scan the QR code with your smart device to see an alphabetized list.

Northampton County sets its legislative agenda for '23

BY STEFANIE JACKSON
Eastern Shore Post

Northampton County has its wish list ready for Del. Rob Bloxom and Sen. Lynwood Lewis when they return to Richmond for the 2023 Virginia General Assembly.

Teacher pay

The No. 1 priority is continuing the pursuit of the Cost of Competing Adjustment or COCA, state funding traditionally awarded to Virginia school divisions near Washington, D.C., to help them offer competitive teacher salaries.

State legislators in Richmond proposed $3.5 million in permanent COCA funding for the Eastern Shore this year but it wasn't included in the state budget.

However, for the last two years the state has provided one-time funding for both Accomack and Northampton counties; in 2021 they received $2 million, of which Northampton's share was $362,000.

Waterways

Another priority is funding for Northampton's waterway communities to build or maintain beaches, boat ramps, marinas, and dredged channels, which are costly. The county has been successful in the past acquiring funding for these types of projects from the Virginia Port Authority.

Sewer systems

Northampton continues to seek state funding to upgrade the sewer systems in Cape Charles and Exmore, which have infiltration and in-flow issues that can negatively impact groundwater, the Chesapeake Bay, and the Atlantic Ocean. Virginia cities like Richmond and Alexandria recently received funding for similar issues.

Exmore will receive $3.5 million from the Virginia Department of Environmental Quality for the town's sewer project, which was included in the two-year state budget, but more is needed.

Housing

Northampton is requesting assistance providing workforce housing – affordable housing for middle-income workers such as teachers and sheriff's deputies – in the form of grants and no-interest loans.

The county plans to partner with its towns and local businesses to facilitate construction of housing suitable to the current market.

VDOT

Northampton also is asking for increased funding from the Virginia Department of Transportation to address poor road conditions, deteriorating sidewalks, and drainage issues.

The Northampton board of supervisors also added four new items to next year's legislative agenda.

Abandoned properties

According to Northampton administrators, the county has many properties that have been abandoned because their owners could not clearly be determined, which can disqualify those properties from the benefit of state and federal funding.

The county is asking the state to fund a program to clear up title issues

BOATING

Some tips on safely anchoring

BY JOHN EVANS

Special to the Eastern Shore Post

Last week I wrote about anchoring your boat. To recap: Direct your vessel into the wind and lower the anchor from the bow, playing out the pre-determined line for a 5:1 to 7:1 scope depending on weather conditions.

So how do we get the anchor back onboard? To retrieve or “weigh” the anchor, you first start your engine and make sure everything is operating properly.

Have your mate stand in the bow and point in the direction the anchor line extends from the boat.

Power ahead slowly in the direction of the anchor. The mate will take in the slack line and signal you to stop forward motion when directly over the anchor.

Usually, the anchor will break free when the boat is over it. If it doesn't the mate should take in as much line as possible and then secure the anchor line to a bow cleat.

You should then slowly run your boat in a circle with the line taut. This will hopefully break out the anchor.

When anchoring or weighing the anchor always be conscious of where you place your hands and feet around the anchor line. Many people have been swept overboard when they became caught up in the anchor line.

These Boating Safety Minutes are a public service of Flotilla 12-02 of the US Coast Guard Auxiliary.

If you have time to become a better boater, and help your community, and Coast Guard, call Russell at 757-442-7029.

DCR looks for proposals for Legacy Program

The Virginia Department of Conservation and Recreation is accepting pre-application proposals for submission to the National Park Service Outdoor Recreation Legacy Partnership Program, or ORLP. Part of the Land and Water Conservation Fund, ORLP provides matching grants for outdoor recreation projects in underserved urban areas.

ORLP is a 50-50 matching reimbursement program that provides awards ranging from $300,000 to $10 million.

Nationwide, approximately $192 million in matching funds is available through this national competition. Recipients must be able to fund 100% of their projects while seeking periodic reimbursements.

Eligible applicants include state political subdivisions such as cities, counties and recreation authorities; state agencies and federally recognized Indian tribes.

Unique to the ORLP program, the park project must be located in or contiguous with an incorporated city or town with a population of at least 30,000 people and be located within a half-mile walk of an underserved target community with a high poverty rate.

Eligible projects can include acquisition, development, combination of acquisition and development, or rehabilitation of parks and other outdoor recreation areas.

DCR must submit projects selected through this call for proposals to NPS on behalf of the applicant.

Instructions as well as the DCR ORLP pre-application and reference materials are available at www.dcr.virginia.gov/recreational-planning/lwcf.

Pre-applications are due to DCR via email no later than 4 p.m. on Nov. 15.

Questions directly related to the ORLP application process can be emailed to recreationgrants@dcr.virginia.gov.

Chesapeake Bay anglers await larger striped bass

Four species of fish are comprising the bulk of the angling opportunities along our peninsula. Limits of black sea bass are being landed by anglers fishing the ocean wrecks off Chincoteague, Wachapreague, and Oyster.

Bill Hall

Flounder catches are still coming from inside the seaside inlets. Chesapeake Bay anglers are anxiously awaiting the appearance of a larger class of striped bass, which should begin to show up with the cooling water temperatures.

Off the lower Shore, speckled trout are still the species of choice for most anglers.

Upper Shore

Schoolie-sized striped bass have been the most abundant species in the shallows of the southern Maryland and northern Virginia portions of the Chesapeake Bay. Best action is still occurring in the very early mornings and late afternoons. It's time for the appearance of surface-feeding schools of rockfish in the central portions of the bay. Anglers should look for flocks of birds diving on schools of migrating bay anchovies between Watts Island and Tangier. Jigging anchovy-imitating Crippled Herring or soft plastics will produce plenty of school-sized rockfish action. Action off the seaside has been limited to catches of flounder inside Chincoteague Bay and Assateague Channel. Action in the surf has fallen off over the last week.

Wachapreague

Wachapreague – Captain Lindsay Paul said that there were still a few flounder around, with anglers also having some success targeting speckled trout and puppy drum. Offshore wreck and deep dropping trips are producing some tilefish and large black sea bass.

Amanda Manzella, at the Wachapreague Inn, said anglers continue to make late season flounder catches and anglers fishing the offshore wrecks had successful black sea bass trips with limit catches reported.

Lower Shore

Dez Louie, at Oceans East – Eastern Shore, reported speckled trout continue to reign as the most sought after species on both sides of the lower Shore. Anglers are targeting trout along the seaside marshes and the bayside beaches from Cape Charles down to the Fisherman Island Bridge. Saltwater Assassins, DOA Shrimp, and es of the speckled trout fishery include puppy drum, schoolie-sized striped bass (rockfish), and flounder. Louie added that the inshore ocean wrecks and submerged structure around the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel are producing catches of tautog, sheepshead, and a few keeper-sized black sea bass. Cut hard crab, peeler crabs, sand fleas, and shrimp have all been successful baits for this fishery.

Jeb Brady, at Bailey's Bait & Tackle in Cape Charles, said anglers returned to targeting speckled trout following the windy conditions at the beginning of last week. Fishing had slowed due to the stirred-up water, but anglers willing to move around seeking clearer waters generally were rewarded for their efforts. Some fish in excess of 20 inches were landed, but not in the numbers before the blow. Increasing numbers of schoolie-sized stripers are making their way into the area, providing action for anglers targeting trout in the creeks on light tackle.

Jeb said a few sheepshead remain in the area around Plantation Light and on the structure at the Cabbage Patch. The offshore wrecks have been productive, with anglers reporting limits of nice-sized black sea bass, with some gray triggerfish and tautog mixed in with the catches. Crab and squid baits have been productive over the wrecks. of bay anchovies and bunker.

Berkley Gulp suspended under popping corks have been some of the most productive rigs, but anglers are still having to cull a number of short fish to reach their limit of keeper-sized fish. Bycatch-

Chincoteague sets Christmas parade

Chincoteague Island will host the 42nd Annual Old-Fashioned Christmas Parade on Dec. 3 (inclement weather date Friday, Dec. 9) beginning at 6 p.m. This year's theme, "Christmas in Toyland," offers opportunities to get very creative. Gather friends and family to participate in the parade or just come to watch.

The parade will begin at the intersection of Main Street and Maddox Boulevard, head down Main Street, and end at the old fire hall so attendees can see enchanting floats, bands, marching units, decorated boats, fire companies from across the Eastern Shore, equestrian teams, classic cars, and more. Keep an eye out for Santa too!

Entries may stop at the Judge's Stand in front of Chincoteague Island Library for a short performance.

The Chincoteague Police Department will be collecting new, unwrapped toys for its Annual Toy Run during the parade. Consider making a donation and help put smiles on the faces of less-fortunate children this holiday season.

Festivities continue after the parade at the Chincoteague American Legion Post #159, 4023 Main St. Visit with Santa while enjoying refreshments provided by the Kiwanis Club of Chincoteague.

Trophies and prizes will be awarded by the Chincoteague Chamber of Commerce. Entry deadline is Nov. 19.

Social Security sets benefit increase in '23

Social Security and Supplemental Security Income benefits for approximately 70 million Americans will increase 8.7% in 2023, the Social Security Administration announced today. On average, Social Security benefits will increase by more than $140 per month starting in January.

The 8.7% cost-of-living adjustment (COLA) will begin with benefits payable to more than 65 million Social Security beneficiaries in January 2023. Increased payments to more than 7 million SSI beneficiaries will begin on Dec. 30. (Note: some people receive both Social Security and SSI benefits). The Social Security Act ties the annual COLA to the increase in the Consumer Price Index as determined by the Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"Medicare premiums are going down and Social Security benefits are going up in 2023, which will give seniors more peace of mind and breathing room. This year's substantial Social Security cost-of-living adjustment is the first time in over a decade that Medicare premiums are not rising and shows that we can provide more support to older Americans who count on the benefits they have earned," Acting Commissioner Kilolo Kijakazi said.

Some other adjustments that take effect in January of each year are based on the increase in average wages. Based on that increase, the maximum amount of earnings subject to the Social Security tax (taxable maximum) will increase to $160,200 from $147,000.

Social Security and SSI beneficiaries are normally notified by mail starting in early December about their new benefit amount. The fastest way to find out their new benefit amount is to access their personal my Social Security account to view the COLA notice online. It's secure, easy, and people find out before the mail arrives. People can also opt to receive a text or email alert when there is a new message from Social Security — such as their COLA notice — waiting for them, rather than receiving a letter in the mail. People may create or access their my Social Security account online at www.ssa.gov/myaccount

Information about Medicare changes for 2023 is available at www.medicare.gov. For Social Security beneficiaries enrolled in Medicare, their new higher 2023 benefit amount will be available in December through the mailed COLA notice and my Social Security's Message Center.

The Social Security Act provides for how the COLA is calculated. To read more, please visit www.ssa.gov/cola

What do you say to a girl who isn't there?

BY DAVID LOZELL MARTIN

Eastern Shore Post

Halloween is a good time to ask: How does your rational mind process something irrational? We're not talking about a bump in the night, which your rational mind can dismiss as the house settling. And we're not talking about a shadow you see out of your peripheral vision on a nighttime walk. It was probably the wind moving a tree limb or maybe that pesky neighborhood cat.

We're talking about ... but we'll let Gary Cochran tell the story.

He's the owner, along with his wife, Charlotte, of the Charlotte Hotel and Restaurant in Onancock. Gary Cochran is a no-nonsense former glass industry executive who loves people but probably has never attended a seance. Charlotte Cochran, on the other hand, is an artist who sees the world through a spiritual lens.

But it was Gary Cochran at the check-in desk that 2019 summer afternoon. He recalled, "The lobby door opened and a couple walked in accompanied by their daughter. A normal couple, maybe late 30s, with their daughter who appeared to be about 11 or 12 with shoulder-length dark brown hair. She caught my eye because she was nuzzling her mom's shoulder affectionately as they walked in. Nice to see young people who obviously adore their parents.

"The girl glanced up at me and smiled."

Cochran said he remembers that girl's smile as vividly as anything in his life. And remembering her now, years later, the eeriest, spookiest thing is this: "The girl, her face, her smile were sweet, cheerful ... all entirely normal. Except for what was about to happen."

The husband announced what was obvious, considering they were carrying luggage and approaching a hotel check-in desk, "We're here to check in." The wife told Cochran their name and said, "We have reservations for room 22."

Gary Cochran stands near where he first encountered the little girl who is the subject of this Halloween story. On Nov. 15, Cochran and his wife, Charlotte, will begin their 20th year as owners and operators of the Charlotte Hotel and Restaurant in Onancock.

Cochran checked his reservations list, found their names, and saw that they were, indeed, assigned to room 22 and that they also had dinner reservations. There was, however, one discrepancy: The reservation for the room and for dinner noted only two people, not three.

"This wasn't an issue," Cochran remembered. "Their room accommodates three people, and we can always make room for one more at dinner. After I checked them in, I got their room key, came around to where the three of them were standing, picked up a suitcase, and asked them to follow me to their room.

"As we were walking up the stairs, I asked, without turning to look at the couple, 'Will your daughter be joining you for dinner tonight? I see you reserved for only two people.'"

Silence. Cochran wondered if they had heard him and was about to speak again when the woman asked, "Our daughter?" She seemed alarmed.

The man said, "There are only the two of us."

Cochran recalled, "That's when I turned around ... and almost dropped the suitcase. Following me up the steps were, yes, only two people. Where did the little girl go? As my rational mind tried to figure out what was happening, I led the couple to their room.

"And then I immediately raced down to the lobby, looked around, and headed outside. I searched the sidewalk left and right in front of the hotel. I saw a shopkeeper next door and called out to him, 'Did you see a little girl on the sidewalk just now?'"

"No, no one."

Cochran was baffled but didn't know what to do with his bafflement. His rational mind struggled to decipher something irrational.

Along with being desk clerk, co-owner, and general maintenance man, Cochran also serves at the hotel's bartender. The couple came down to the bar for a predinner drink. As he served them, Cochran said, "When you checked in, I could've sworn there was a young girl accompanying you."

The couple exchanged looks. Cochran wasn't sure if it was confusion, concern, or what — but definitely some message or emotion passed between them.

Cochran recalled, "I apologized for making them uncomfortable and said, 'I was so convinced that a little girl was with you that I even went outside to look for her on the street. She was 11 or 12, shoulder-length brown hair.'"

Cochran turned to the woman and said, "She was nuzzling your shoulder when you folks walked in."

Abruptly, the woman's mood relaxed and she told Cochran, "Oh, that's our daughter Rachael. She really wanted to be here with us tonight."

Before Cochran could insist that their daughter WAS with them, the man said, "But it wasn't possible."

Their table was ready, the couple was whisked away, and for them the matter seemed settled.

Not so for Cochran. His question: "If a stranger describes your daughter and says he saw her with you, but she wasn't with you, wouldn't that raise some alarms? Wouldn't you ask the stranger some questions? To this day, I have a vivid image of that young girl nuzzling her mom as they walked in. I remain convinced there is more to the story."

It's Halloween, an appropriate time for more-to-the-story stories about a little girl whose face and smile were delightful.

Cheerful.

Normal.

And not there.

Are ghosts real? Or is it something else?

BY ADOLPHUS AMES

Eastern Shore Post

Do you believe in ghosts? Say those five words to the average person and they will respond no. Even some of those that have had paranormal encounters will quickly tell you they don't believe in ghosts.

Dora Sullivan, a former mayor of Cape Charles, is one of those people. She used to live in a brick house on Monroe Avenue within the town. The house was built in 1894 and served as a school until 1912. Sullivan purchased the house in the 1990s.

It didn't take long for all those hallmarks of a ghostly presence to appear.

Her dog picked up a habit of barking at the wall.

The smell of talcum powder hovered on the stairs.

Her husband, Mike, heard footsteps upstairs when no one else was around.

Allegedly, the ghost is Sara Doughty, a teacher who taught at the school in the Sullivans' house from 1898 to 1912.

When the school closed and moved to a new location, Doughty wasn't happy about the move.

Sullivan had a Greek Orthodox priest come over and bless the house.

"Once the priest came I never smelled perfume or heard the dog bark again," she said.

And yet, Sullivan still doesn't believe in ghosts. Personally, I'm not sure where I stand.

I grew up in an old house on Seaside Road in Capeville. When I was around 3 years old, I sneaked into the kitchen one night to steal some snacks and I saw a man in a plaid shirt standing by the refrigerator.

I'd seen a few horror movies by then so I was scared at the sight of this stranger.

I ran into the living room and told my parents. When they checked the kitchen, no one was there.

Many years before my parents moved to Capeville, a man was murdered in the house. At the time, his family members still lived in the area.

Curious and aware of the crime, my father talked to one of them. According to his family, he was shot in the kitchen and wearing a plaid shirt when he died.

I had another experience during the same time period. In 2000, a teenager died in a car accident not far from my house.

A few months later, I was outside playing in the backyard and my older sister overheard me talking to someone.

When she stepped outside to investigate, I told her I was talking to a brown-haired girl standing by the utility pole.

"She's looking for her car," I said. "She asked me if I had seen it."

I pointed in her direction to identify her. But my sister saw nothing. From her point of view, I was talking to myself.

My family mentions these incidents from time to time and whenever these topics come up it makes me wonder.

Are ghosts real or is something else going on when people like me or the Sullivans have these experiences?

I honestly can't answer that question. Nobody can.

Ghosts have a habit of being inexplicable

BY JENNIFER CORDING

Special to the Eastern Shore Post

The night is silent except for the low buzz of crickets. The air is cool — fall is fully here. We are walking from my sister's house to the dock at the dead end of the road. There's an October full moon, which seems appropriate for our purpose.

Northside Chesconessex is largely a waterman's community. Crab pots are piled high in people's yards. Cats skitter as we walk down the road. Many mailboxes have the same last name, suggesting the insular nature of the neighborhood.

With my sister Susan and daughter Ava, I walk toward the place where Susan once saw a ghost. There aren't many people I'd believe, if they saw a ghost. But Susan isn't the ghost-seeing type, so I believe something strange happened on that dock.

Ava is similarly disinclined to see a ghost. I'm nervous despite the good company. Part of me wants to see the ghost, and part of me wants to dash back up the road where things aren't as ghostly.

We are at the dock where the creek water is lapping against the small beach and the boats docked there.

Susan tells this story: It happened one autumn night, years ago now, on the dock where her husband, Helmut, was fishing for rockfish. Susan was chilled, so she sat in their truck nearby. Crab pots were piled on the dock.

Suddenly she saw a figure dressed in a yellow top and black pants standing on the dock past the crab pots, near where Helmut fished.

As she watched, the figure slowly tipped into the water and disappeared into the darkness.

Susan called to Helmut, but he hadn't seen the apparition. He was spooked though, Susan says, after hearing what she saw.

This night we walk out on the dock, and Susan points to the place where the ghost tumbled into the water. Nothing is there. I have no idea how to conjure up a ghost. I'm not sure at all that I want to. Part of me wants to see it, for the sake of this story. But the bigger part of me is spooked.

I ask Susan and Ava whether we should go back to the house. It's chilly by the water, and I'm ready to be warm again.

I wonder aloud if the apparition was the ghost of a waterman who fell into the creek and drowned. We agreed it might be and walked back up the road.

For years afterwards, Susan watched television programs about ghosts, trying to understand what happened that night. I don't think she's any closer to explaining it. I think it's a habit of ghosts to be inexplicable.

Regardless, Susan says, "It was definitely a ghost."

Uprooted railroad haunted by its history

BY STEFANIE JACKSON

Eastern Shore Post

The Eastern Shore's old railroad tracks have been ripped up from Cape Charles to Hallwood, leaving behind a lonely path of dirt and stone down which a ghost train silently thunders.

The railroad made the Eastern Shore prosperous as it shipped people, produce, and provisions.

But literally every railroad crossing on the Eastern Shore is haunted by a history of horror, with locomotives colliding with vehicles and pedestrians, often with fatal results.

Sometimes the terror happened on the trains themselves as they streamed through communities and woodlands. The town some people just passed might be the last one they ever see.

It is quiet now along the narrow railroad right of way, but it was disquieting then.

In one instance more than 100 years ago, two Eastern Shore men died when their automobile was run over by an oncoming express train, an accident so tragic that people still talk about it today.

The date was Saturday, Nov. 27, 1920, and 56-year old James Fuller Parks and his son-in-law, 31-year-old William Edward Matthews, were returning to Parks' home in Onley after they had bought a farm in Hopeton, between Parksley and Bloxom, for $19,500, according to an old newspaper article.

Two other vehicles had crossed the railroad tracks ahead of Parks and Matthews, who apparently did not see the oncoming train, the article stated.

The train struck and Parks was killed instantly; Matthews was left gravely injured and unconscious. Ironically, Matthews was taken by train to Peninsula Hospital in Salisbury, Md., where he died around 10:30 p.m., shortly after briefly regaining consciousness.

The article added that both men had sustained internal injuries and their legs were broken but "their bodies were not cut up as is usually the case," suggesting that such accidents were not uncommon at the time.

The railroad bed at Hopeton, where a train struck a car, killing two men.

The bodies of both men were interred in Parksley Cemetery. They were survived by their wives. Elizabeth Parks lived another 27 years before her death in 1947. Mary Reade Parks Matthews didn't die until 1991, at age 103.

Perhaps the men's story survived more than 100 years because Mary Matthews lived so long to tell the tale. Perhaps the story was particularly memorable because it was one of two train-related tragedies that occurred on or about the same day.

If the first tragedy happened because a train was traveling too fast, the second happened because a train was too slow.

Another newspaper article reported that on Nov. 27, 1920, 6-year-old Minnie Stallings, of Norfolk, died on the Eastern Shore while aboard the New York, Philadelphia, and Norfolk Railroad midnight express.

Minnie had swallowed a piece of chalk that became lodged in one of her lungs, and she was being transported to Philadelphia to see a specialist who would have operated to remove the chalk.

After the little girl died, the train stopped in Parksley so her body could be removed and prepared for burial; she was returned to Norfolk on the early morning train the next day.

According to an online database, the child's grave in Forest Lawn Cemetery, Norfolk, marked by a single block, states her first name was not Minnie but Marnie, and she died not on Nov. 27 but Nov. 29.

Regardless of the exact details of the child's name or date of death, one can imagine how locals would have reacted to the news of two train-related tragedies that occurred so close together.

The old railroad crossing in Hopeton, where two men lost their lives over 100 years ago, seems especially bleak today with railroad ties stacked uselessly by the freshly turned soil.

Back then, a family came apart. Today, the railroad itself has come apart.

It's almost as if someone has desecrated a roadside memorial, and all that's left of it are a few pink-purple wildflowers scattered through the grass a few feet away.

Attempts to identify the wildflowers and assign possible meaning for their presence near the former railroad were unsuccessful, but several sources revealed that pink symbolizes innocence.

The innocence of a little girl who had barely begun to live. The innocence of two men simply living their lives and investing in a future that was not to be.

Spirit lingers after ‘murder of the century’

BY CAROL VAUGHN

Eastern Shore Post

The spirit of a teenage girl who died tragically may linger at the Capt. Timothy Hill House on Chincoteague.

The owners “feel like she is protecting the home,” said Cindy Faith, who has been a docent at the house for more than a decade.

“Any town has its scandals, but they called it the murder of the century,” Faith said.

It happened in 1885 at the small log plank house, built around 1800 and the oldest known structure on Chincoteague.

The house, which was moved in the 1980s from its original location on the island’s east side, now sits on a plot on the north part of Main Street and operates as a museum, after it was saved and restored by current owners Paul Brzozowski and Louisa Flaningam.

The name of the young woman is Emma Virginia Hill, affectionately known as Jennie.

Her presence, when felt, “is not a scary feeling,” Faith said.

Twice in the years Faith has been a docent, children visiting the museum have talked about a girl, unseen by the adults in the room, being there.

One little boy, around 5 years old, was visiting the house museum with his family when he looked intently at the corner of the room and started talking to someone — but there was no one there.

His mother asked him what he was doing.

“I’m talking to the girl,” he said.

On another occasion, a young girl visiting the house with her family went upstairs.

Her mother called her down when they were ready to leave.

“She was like, ‘Mama, can I stay?’ And her mom said, ‘No, we have to go. Come on down,’” Faith said.

Then the child said, “But the little girl, she wants me to stay and play.”

The mother went upstairs to see what was going on — and her daughter was alone.

Neither child was afraid of whoever it was they were conversing with.

As reported in newspaper accounts at the time, Jennie, 13, the youngest of the 11 Hill children, and her mother, Zipporah, were shot outside the home by Tom Freeman, a farmhand who had worked for the family for around a decade, in an apparent case of unrequited love.

Freeman after shooting the two ran into the other, larger house on the property, where he lived with the Hill family. There he committed suicide.

According to Flaningam, Freeman wrote letters to Jennie that he never mailed but put on top of his blue suit in his bedroom before going down to confront Zipporah. The letters show they were courting for about eight months.

Newspaper reports at the time gave a graphic account of the tragic event, according to Faith.

After they were shot, Jennie and her mother ran inside the little house, where her brother Daniel’s family lived at the time.

A doctor and others were called to the scene.

Jennie’s wounds appeared more superficial, so they treated her and then turned their attention to her mother.

“Her mother had been shot more seriously so they focus a lot of energy on her mom, and Jennie just kind of sits in that little room and is just grief-stricken, but also blames herself for this crime,” having perhaps engaged in some flirtation with the young man, according to Faith.

After they worked all night to save the mother, Zipporah survived, which seemed a miracle.

Still, when they went to tell Jennie the good news that next morning, they found Jennie dead.

“The town is just really shell-shocked. It’s just a horrible thing. And eventually that house is abandoned,” Faith said.

The family living there at the time. His father, who built the house, by then had moved into another house nearby. Hill’s older children were grown and also had moved out.

Freeman, 21 at the time, “is ready to get married — and who is he going to marry?” Faith said, adding it is known “there was some flirtation between the two of them.”

Still, Jennie’s parents doted on their youngest child and wanted her to have a better life, perhaps by marrying a man of means, not the hired hand.

When Freeman asked her parents for permission to court Jennie, they said no.

“He is furious and quits his job and gets a job on the Winter Quarter lightship (in Maryland),” Faith said.

Around 10 months later, Freeman received a letter from Timothy Hill Jr., asking him to come back to work on the farm.

Freeman took that as a good sign — perhaps he would be allowed to marry Jennie, after all.

When he returned, however, he found that was not the case.

After Freeman’s return, Jennie and her mother were walking downtown, headed to a dressmaker to have a dress made for Jennie to wear to a school dance — one she planned to attend with another boy.

Freeman approached them in the street, they argued, and then he pulled out a gun and shot the two women.

Afterwards, the house eventually was abandoned and sat vacant for years, becoming derelict. Then, in the 1980s, Richard Vesely saved it by getting permission to move it from the property, which was being sold.

The dilapidated structure sat for 30 years at a site down Main Street from its current location, before the current owners saw it and saved it.

The house is registered as a Virginia Historic Landmark and is on the National Register of Historic Places. Information about it may be viewed at the website, www.captaintimothyhill-house.com

Sarah lost a life that wasn't actually hers

BY TED SHOCKLEY
Eastern Shore Post

I first learned about the condemned woman during a random internet session long ago — one of those hours-long, down-the-rabbit-hole searches that started with an innocuous subject and ended up in a macabre place:

Sarah, a Northampton County slave, was hanged in June 1705 after being convicted of arson. She was the second Black woman ever executed in America, as best I could tell.

That's all I knew about Sarah, but over time, as I walked the county courthouse green in Eastville, I pondered her life and fate.

The colonial court met in an Eastville tavern at the time of her execution. Black people accused of crimes punishable by death were tried in county courts. Those executed were hanged from a tree near the courthouse, my reading revealed.

Not knowing exactly where the long-gone tavern stood in the county seat, I often wondered whether I walked near the spot where Sarah was executed 300 years earlier — or maybe on the very spot.

It was ghostly and ghostly both, but I'm usually indifferent about ghost stories. Everyday life is spooky enough.

I'm also a genuine spoilsport about Halloween. I usually feel shallow when I focus on what is light and jokey because of the grim realities around us. A scary, haunted environment really isn't playful. It is what the Ukrainian people face each day.

Further, the customs of Halloween have become a daily event for us all.

Many people in our society frequently dress in a costume of sorts — dapper businessmen and tweedy college professors and college kids wearing bathing suits made of the American flag. Lawmen in Texas still wear cowboy hats.

Speaking of disguises, plenty among us who get their hair dyed every month won't leave the house without face makeup so they look less gray and less wrinkled. Others get spray-on suntans, multiple piercings, arm-length tattoos, or plastic surgery.

Very few of us present ourselves as we actually look, Halloween or not.

But our modern vanities present a jolting juxtaposition with the last days of Sarah, the Northampton County slave who was hauled into dusty Eastville three centuries ago to stand trial.

I have no idea how an internet database of capital punishments unearthed her execution. But I needed to learn more. I'd walked around Eastville so many times thinking of her.

Northampton County's white-columned brick courthouse has a severe and foreboding facade, but the people inside were nice and helpful.

In the clerk's office, they found the order book. There, in ornate cursive writing on page 245, some facts surfaced.

Things went awry on Major John Custis' Northampton County farm in the spring of 1705.

A house containing corn and wheat burned, as did the salt house. Inside one of them were several barrels of gunpowder, which exploded. It must have been quite a chaotic scene.

Sarah was charged with "willful burning" and a "penal assembly" convened to weigh the evidence.

The handwriting was difficult to decipher. I asked a deputy clerk named Morgan Doughty for help. He did an amazing job reading it, and I listened with suspense.

I imagined also the accused Black woman listening to the White judge and watching the White jury on a suffocating summer day.

Did she get a fair trial? We will never know. Where was she hanged? Where was her body interred? The court records didn't say.

It all remains a mystery. If you're standing in Eastville, you could be standing near where she took her last breath, swinging from a tree, as a crowd watched.

It is a frightening scene to imagine. Even if Sarah was guilty, the punishment certainly doesn't fit the crime. It all seems primitive, cruel, and brutal.

Times have changed — arson is no longer a capital offense, and Virginia no longer has capital punishment.

Still, the state has executed more people than any other state since 1608 — the Death Penalty Information Center puts the count at 1,390.

Of those, Sarah was the 16th condemned criminal in Virginia history — and its first Black woman executed.

All of that leads to a horrible and haunting circumstance. In what became the land of the free, Sarah the Northampton County slave lost a life she didn't actually own.

Her life was taken twice — once by the institution of slavery and once by the executioner. And that's a more frightening and sinister development than any of us would want out of Halloween.

Local artist's oyster shell ornaments to raise funds for Ukraine orphans

BY CAROL VAUGHN
Eastern Shore Post

Artist Bill Schmidt is known locally for his hand-painted oyster shell ornaments, typically adorned with a lighthouse.

He often gives away ornaments, typically painted with a red-and-black lighthouse, especially around Christmas.

Since Russia went to war against Ukraine, Schmidt has been painting blue-and-yellow striped lighthouses on the shells, in honor of the colors of Ukraine's flag, and he has been offering them in exchange for donations to help the people of Ukraine.

Donations made in exchange for ornaments at a March fundraiser at a Hampton restaurant owned by a friend of his from Ukraine raised around $500. Another event, at Franktown United Methodist Church, raised $200 more, Schmidt said.

Now, Schmidt is making ornaments specifically to raise money to help and preserve and promote property ownership.

Menhaden fishing

This summer, thousands of dead fish washed up on Northampton beaches due to incidents related to fishing menhaden – small herring-like fish used to make products like fish oil health supplements – and citizens demanded action by the Virginia Marine Resources Commission.

The county is requesting VMRC to create and implement additional regulations for the commercial menhaden fishing industry, as well as state funding for measures protecting menhaden from overfishing.

Cellphone service

When it comes to keeping the lines of communication open on the Eastern Shore, the region succeeded with high-speed internet when the local broadband authority received a $12.3 million Virginia Telecommunication Initiative or VATI grant last year.

However, the Shore's cellphone service is below standard compared to its neighbors such as Pocomoke City, Md., to the north, and Virginia Beach to the south.

Not only is 5G service unavailable throughout the Shore, many citizens are unable to maintain a cellphone signal.

As cellphone service is "vital for our public safety, economy, and quality of life," according to county administration, Northampton is asking the state to fund studies and propose solutions for this communications issue.

Health care for inmates

At the suggestion of Supervisor John Coker, Northampton also will ask for help paying for the health care costs of inmates at the Eastern Shore Regional Jail.

The Virginia General Assembly is expected to begin its first session of 2023 on Jan. 11, the second Wednesday of the month.

Ukrainian orphans, an effort being organized through a teacher at the Tidewater Ukrainian School in Chesapeake.

He raised over $400 at an event in Exmore earlier this month.

"It's all donations. I don't ask any money. A quarter. Some people donate $20 and don't even take a shell. I say, 'You've got to take a shell; that's the law,'" Schmidt said.

He plans to offer ornaments for donations at two more events this year — the Fall Art and Food Festival, Saturday, Oct. 29, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., at Franktown United Methodist Church, and the Kiwani's Club craft show at Nandua High School Nov. 19.

"I'd like to thank the people that are donating. I'm just totally amazed," he said.
